G.O.P. CROSSOVER A HELP TO CARTER

In Wisconsin, He Gained 3 Republican Votes for Each 2 That Went to Udall

By ROBERT REINHOLD

Jimmy Carter won three votes for every two gained by Morris K. Udall among Republicans who crossed party lines Tuesday to vote in the Wisconsin Democratic primary—a factor that may have given the former Georgia Governor his razor-thin margin over the Arizona Congressman.

Close analysis of responses given by voters questioned as they left the polls by The New York Times and CBS News indicates that about 8 percent of those who cast a Democratic ballot Tuesday identified themselves as Republicans.

While to some Democrats, this may detract from the significance of Mr. Carter's victory, it suggests that he can appeal across party lines.

In terms of issues, surveys of voters in both the Wisconsin and New York primaries Tuesday suggest that the Democratic race has crystallized along two lines. On one side, Mr. Carter and Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington are battling for command of the party's center-right constituency. On the other, Mr. Udall has prevailed among the liberals, but has not been able to extend his appeal broadly to other sections of the party.

Mr. Udall has emerged with consistent support among those Democrats on the liberal side of a broad range of policy is-

$31.6 Million Mall In Jamaica Planned; Step in Revival Seen

By GLENN FOWLER

Construction of a $31.6 million shopping center in the heart of the blighted Jamaica business district in Queens will begin late this year in what city officials and community leaders envision as the first major step in the renaissance of a once-thriving hub of commerce.

"Not only will this supply an immediate postive impact in the way of construction-related jobs," Mayor Beame said in announcing the start of the project, "but it will help trigger a wide range of activity that will benefit both the public and private sectors of the city."

The two-story, 500,000-square-foot Jamaica Mall will be built by the Corland Corporation, a developer of shopping centers in severa parts of the country, and financed by the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company. It will occupy an L-shaped tract at Jamaica Avenue and Parsons Boulevard, near the Macy's and Gertz department-store branches and a quarter-mile east of the Long Island Rail Road's Jamaica Station.

BANK OF AMERICA SAYS IT WILL BUY NEW YORK'S NOTES

$100 Million Sale Hinges on 3 Demands to Assure Payment by the State

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, April 7—The Bank of America agreed in principle today to purchase $100 million in short-term state notes for its own portfolio this spring—a step that gave a major boost to the state's effort to meet its critical financing needs this year.

The decision by the country's biggest bank to participate in the state's $4 billion "spring borrowing" drive was announced this afternoon at bank headquarters in San Francisco.

It came after several days of private negotiations with the state that have been watched carefully by executives of virtually every major bank in the country, all of whom have been asked to assist the state.

2 Reasons for Participating

Because of its stature as one of the nation's most influential financial institutions, the Bank of America has been viewed as the key to the state's attempt to rekindle investor confidence in its finances and accomplish its seasonal borrowing with the help of out-of-state banks.

In a reference to the widespread concern over the state's problems, Arthur V. Toupin, executive vice president of the Bank of America, said in a statement in California that the bank was participating "both because the investment is credit-worthy and because of the substantial long-range public benefits of having New York State financially healthy."

"This is tremendous news," said an executive at one of the major New York City banks, which is assisting the state in its efforts. "I think this thing is going to work."

Demands Made of State

In some respects, however, the decision today simply clears the way for an effort by the state that may prove as difficult as its effort with the Bank of America. The biggest problem the state faces is time, because it must line up agreement among scores of banks and corporations, in and out of the state, by the end of April 15, the first day that the state needs the cash.

In addition, the Bank of America decision was contingent on three demands being met. First, the state must enact new legislation calling on Comptroller Arthur Levitt to

FORD VOWS VETO OF ANY EXTRA AID FOR ISRAEL IN '76

Tells Leaders of Congress That $2.2 Billion Already Approved Is Sufficient

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 7 — President Ford told Congressional leaders today that Israel was receiving adequate foreign aid from the United States and that he would veto efforts to increase assistance by $550 million this year.

In what may provoke another clash with Israel's supporters on Capitol Hill, Mr. Ford insisted that the $2.2 billion already approved for Israel in the current fiscal year and the $1.8 billion proposed for the 1977 fiscal year "are adequate to enable Israel to maintain its security."

If the additional $550 million is included in the final version of the appropriations bill which allocates $5.6 billion in assistance grants and credits, "I will be forced to exercise my veto," Mr. Ford said.

A Breakfast Meeting

Mr. Ford reportedly made his views known forcefully in a closed-door breakfast meeting at the White House with leaders from the Senate and the House. They were repeated in a letter to the House Speaker, Carl Albert of Oklahoma, made public by the White House.

Supporters of Israel have been trying, at first with Administration concurrence and now without it, to persuade Congress to approve a special supplemental appropriation for a three-month transitional period in a shift to a new fiscal year, starting Oct. 1 instead of July 1. One bid for supplemental aid would give Israel $550 million as part of an $800 million addition to the Middle East aid package.

Incentive to 'Arab Foes'

The issue has become highly important for Israel because Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin has been criticized in Parliament for not having received ironclad assurances from Mr. Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, when he visited Washington in January, that the Administration would support the additional funds.

It has been complicated by switches in the Administration's position. At first Mr. Kissinger told Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on assistance, that he would support the extra

Teng Hsiao-ping

Hua Is Now Viewed As the Heir Apparent

By JOSEPH LELYVELD
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 7—The selection of Hua Kuo-feng as First Deputy Chairman of the Chinese Communist Party today appears to designate him as the successor not only to the late Chou En-lai but eventually the party's aging Chairman, Mao Tse-tung.

Mr. Hua's elevation in the party hierarchy coincides with the disgrace of Mr. Chou's own choice as a successor, Teng Hsiao-ping. Coming within two days of rioting in Peking's Tien An Men Square, the move appeared to be an urgent attempt to end the rancorous succession struggle that has unsettled China since Mr. Chou's death on Jan. 8.

Analysts reached here and by telephone in Hong Kong agreed that the leadership shifts represented an attempt at a compromise rather than a clear-cut victory for the so-called "radical" faction that has led the campaign against Mr. Teng as an "unrepentant capitalist roader."

Mr. Hua is aligned with none of the factions that have waged intermittent struggle in China for a decade now, and that is perhaps the main reason for his stunning rise to a position in the party that places him second only to Chairman Mao.

The late Mr. Chou was first deputy chairman of the Communist Party in fact but never in title. The last time the title was used it was held by Lin Piao, the military commander who was named for a time in the party constitution as Mr. Mao's "chosen successor."

Mr. Lin fell into disgrace in 1971 and died, reportedly while fleeing China, in a plane in Mongolia after what was later described as an attepted coup.

That incident—in addition to

The Globe and Mail, Toronto

PEKING, Thursday, April 8—The Chinese leadership, moving in a deteriorating political situation, deposed Deputy Prime Minister Teng Hsiao-ping last night and appointed Hua Kuo-feng as Prime Minister and First Deputy Chairman of the Communist Party.

Mr. Hua thus emerged from China's power struggle as the leading potential successor to Texts of announcements and Hsinhua report, page 16.

Chairman Mao Tse-tung, now 82 years old and in frail health.

Until the death of Prime Minister Chou En-lai on Jan. 8, which precipitated the power struggle, Mr. Teng had been widely regarded as Mr. Mao's eventual successor. The three posts from which he was dismissed yesterday — deputy chairman of the party, First Deputy Prime Minister in the Government and chief of staff of the armed forces—gave him a power base unmatched by any other candidate for the succession.

The party's Central Committee, announcing the dismissal, linked it to the demonstrations in Peking on Monday. The announcement did not directly blame Mr. Teng for the demonstrations, but it noted that those involved were "openly hoisting the ensign supporting Teng Hsiao-ping."

Teng Stays in Party

The announcement yesterday said Mr. Teng would remain a member of the party, which has 20 million members, "so as to see how he will behave himself in the future." But his dismissal from the other posts effectively ended the most remarkable comeback by any Chinese leader since the revolution in 1949.

Mr. Teng, 71, spent more than six years in disgrace after the outbreak of the Cultural Revolution in the mid-1960's. But in 1973, with Mr. Chou dying of cancer, he emerged from obscurity and quickly assumed a commanding position

Hughes Estate Fight Seen As Doubts Rise About Will

By WALLACE TURNER
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, April 7 — There appears to be a growing feeling among knowledgeable associates of Howard R. Hughes that the eccentric billionaire left no will to guide the disposal of his great estate.

Sources close to the Hughes empire say that no sign of a will has emerged so far in searches or in questioning of employees who lived with Mr. Hughes. Doubts are growing that one was ever signed, according to this account.

The absence of a will would foreshadow a major legal battle over division of Mr. Hughes's $1.5 billion holdings.

A source who asked not to be identified said that executives of Summa Corporation seemed to be making plans to try to pay inheritance taxes out of corporate earnings if they can get payment deferred.

In Washington today, a Federal tax expert said that more than three-quarters of Mr. Hughes's estate would go for Federal taxes if no will had been left. This expert also said that Summa, Mr. Hughes's personal holding company, would probably qualify for a 10-year payout plan.

Mr. Hughes, who died Monday of kidney failure at the age of 70, was buried today in Houston, next to his parents. About 20 mourners were at the graveside during the simple, brief Episcopal ceremony.

Summa was the holding company for almost all of Mr. Hughes's wealth, which has never been precisely tabulated by anyone outside his organization. The current size of his holdings is estimated at $1.5 billion, and the tax bill would be well above $1 billion.

It has long been assumed that Mr. Hughes signed a will that would put his estate into

That's not the picture Governor Carey and his Democratic state chairman, Patrick J. Cunningham, envisioned four months ago when they first came up with the notion of an "Empire Slate for the Empire State"—a huge uncommitted delegation. The delegation would have strong bargaining position at the national convention, ostensibly in behalf of more Federal help for New York and very possibly for Mr. Carey on the national ticket—a natural aspiration for a New York governor, particularly the first Democratic governor of the state in 20 years.

At the time, Mr. Carey and Mr. Cunningham had already

Loch Ness Monster: A Serious View

By WALTER SULLIVAN

After years of ridicule directed against reports of a Loch Ness "monster," scientists have begun to take seriously the possibility that such a creature does indeed inhabit the depths of the Scottish lake.

Publications currently issued from such institutions as Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology treat as plausible the evidence collected last summer and three years earlier purporting to show that a large animal inhabits Loch Ness.

The evidence, much of it presented last December in London, was received then with considerable skepticism. Now, however, it has won support from several prominent specialists. It is described in articles in Technology Review, published at M.I.T. and in MCZ Newsletter, published by Harvard's Museum of Comparative Zoology.

Dr. Alfred W. Crompton, professor of biology at Harvard and director of the museum, has told the Loch Ness investigators that he personally finds the evidence "extremely intriguing." It is, he said, "sufficiently suggestive of a large aquatic animal" to call for more intensive investigations along the lines already used in 1972 and 1975.

Similar comments have been made by Dr. George R. Zug, curator of reptiles and amphibians at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington; by Dr. Christopher McGowan, associate curator in the department of vertebrate paleontology at the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto, and by the chairman, vice chairman and executive director of the New England Aquarium in Boston.

This artist's drawing is based on a photograph made by an underwater camera in Loch Ness on June 20, 1975. The object, which was about five feet from the camera, is about two feet long and is said to be the head of a living creature with hornlike protuberances.

In a statement of their unanimous views, five zoologists and paleontologists at the Natural History Museum in London are more cautious.

They agree that the 1972 photographs, when enhanced by

Ford Rejects Easing of Cable-TV Curbs

By DAVID BURNHAM
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 7—After six months of study by the White House and intense lobbying by broadcasters, the Ford Administration has decided against recommending legislation aimed at permitting cable television to compete against over-the-air broadcasters.

According to Paul W. MacAvoy, a member of the Council of Economic Advisers, and John C. Rose, a Deputy Assistant Attorney General, the decision was reached by the White House after a series of meetings with many of those who would be affected by changes in the present law, including the networks, cable operators, movie producers and sports organizations.

President Ford has made a number of speeches calling for less Government regulation, and the Administration has sent to Congress specific proposals it said would make the airlines, railroads and trucks more competitive.

The decision of the White House not to recommend legislation lessening the legal restraints surrounding cable television became known as the President scheduled a meeting tomorrow with the chairmen of 10 major regulatory agencies during which he is expected to urge them to adopt rules to increase competition in the sections of the economy they regulate.

A staff report completed by the House Communications Subcommittee 2½ months ago asserted that the restrictions imposed by the Federal Communications Commission on the cable-television industry provided broadcasters with an improper, unconstitutional and

German Youths Enlightened by Study Of 15-Year-Olds Who Served Nazis

By CRAIG R. WHITNEY
Special to The New York Times

AACHEN, West Germany—Joachim Fischer, a 17-year-old West German high school student, knows neither the terror of dictatorship nor the destruction of war.

"We used to laugh when our parents would say if only you knew what we've been through," he said. But two years ago, Joachim and a score of his classmates at the Kaiser Karl Preparatory School here began a study of 52 alumni who had been impressed into Hitler's antiaircraft artillery auxiliary as 15-year-olds.

Now, the youth says, "I believe we understand them better." The school's 300-page study, called "To the Cannon at 15," has just been published by their teacher, Paul Emunds, and 5,000 copies have been sold. some of the students' observations are startling, since there is very little literature on their subject in this country.

Little Common Ground

Horst Carl, also 17, concluded: "It's awfully hard, at times, to see what common ground there is between our era and theirs." Yet only 33 years ago, the boys of the Kaiser Karl school were being called into uniform as Allied bombers began strategic-bombing attacks on Germany.

In the study, the students found that most of the wartime 15-year-olds were eager to serve and bear arms, not reluctant. They did not realize the dangers, they were expecting adventures, and most of all they were eager to be treated as men—and in those days, here, men were soldiers.

"Many were excited at the thought of serving the Fatherland," Horst Carl wrote in his essay, "This patriotic feeling, in this form, is alein to us, and our generation can imagine only with difficulty that these boys thought it an honor to serve the Fatherland as antiaircraft auxiliaries.

"They had been practically born into the regime, and many had known nothing else but this system since childhood; to that extent, most of them lacked any political consciousness."

Involvement Urged

Thomas Zeewaert wrote in his essay: "A consequence of reflection about this time should be for every young person to become politically involved at an early age, and to develop critical awareness."

Next year these boys will reach draft age. They, too, will have to decide whether to answer the call to arms, in the West Germany army—and in peacetime.

Christoph Poggeler who came to school like his classmates in blue jeans and open shirt just before the Easter vacation began, said: "I think any kind of military service is wrong, and I will register as a conscientious objector." Not, he added, because of what he learned studying the Hitler period, but out of conviction.

His classmate, Martin Josef Gobbels (no relation to Hitler's propagandist) observed: "I think there is a clear difference between serving the cause of National Socialism and serving in a democracy. In a democratic state you can serve in the military with a reasonably clear conscience, though I don't believe it's compatible with Christian principles."

Most of the boys are Catholic, like most of the people in this Rhineland city that Charlemagne made his capital more than 1,100 years ago.

Rebellion of Youth

Their study casts doubt on some notions that have become almost cliches—for example, the idea that the "new" German youth is different because it rebelled against the older generation.

They found that one of the most powerful reasons attracting 15-year-old boys into military service in 1943 and 1944 was that service, too, was a foorm of rebellion —their parents did not want them to go. "Older people would often say 'the poor boys,' and that was the last thing we wanted to hear," one of the interviewed alumni told them.

Aachen, close to the Belgian-Dutch border, was bombed out by British and American planes and evacuated in 1944. The boys of 1976, in their effort to understand the motivations of their predecessors, have some harsh words for the Allied air attacks:

"No one who has experienced the bombing terror himself will ever forget it," wrote Dieter Braun. "Anyone who learns of what it was should help make sure that such horror is never repeated. But has mankind learned about the misery and senselessness of terror bombing?"

He did not answer the question.

Buckley Not Source Of Reports of Views Of Kissinger, Aide

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 7—It was mistakenly reported in The New York Times today that Senator James L. Buckley, the New York Conservative-Republican, had made copies of confidential comments on Europe by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and his adviser Helmut Sonnenfeldt available to other members of Congress.

The documents, which were printed in The Times on Monday and Tuesday, said, according to a summary, that the United States should seek an "organic" relationship between the Soviet Union and its East European allies so that the present "unnatural relationship" marked by Soviet military power did not lead to another uprising that could conceivably cause World War III.

Mr. Sonnenfeldt later said that his choice of the word "organic" had been unfortunate, and that he meant something like a "more tolerant, more complicated" relationship that would allow the Eastern Europeans more latitude for their national aspirations.

eSnator Buckley, in a letter to The Times, characterized the Times report that he had released the documents as "an outright lie." Mr. Buckley's administrative assistant, Leonard Saffir, supplemented the letter with a denial that the Sonnenfeldt an d Kissinger material had been supplied to The Times or "to anyone" by an associate of the Senator.

The source of The Times material, a member of Congress, said he had acquired it from an aide of Senator Buckley.

Several copies of the remarks by Mr. Kissinger and Mr. Sonnenfeldt, which were made at a meeting of American ambassadors in London last December, were circulated in Washington to members of Congress and to journalists.

In the last 10 days, the receivers of the State Department summaries of these comments have, with few exceptions, been political conservatives, and the intention was apparently to provide material for campaign speeches against the Ford Administration.

Saigon Primate Declares Church Is Not Political

SAIGON, South Vietnam (Agence-France Presse) — The Roman Catholic Church in South Vietnam does not aim to be a political force, but must remain apostolic and not be reduced to silence, Archbishop Van Binh of Saigon says in his latest pastoral letter.

Archbishop Binh repeated his appeal to both the clergy and laymen to take an active part in the life of the nation. He advised them to recognize, on the political level, the primacy of the revolution.

The pastoral letter has published at a time of tension in certain Catholic circles following incidents involving priests and laymen.

C.I.A. LINKS SUKARNO TO REDS' 1965 COUP

WASHINGTON, April 7 (Reuters)—The late Indonesian President Sukarno had prior knowledge of and may have participated in the planning of an unsuccessful Communist coup against his Government in 1965, according to a previously secret Central Intelligence Agency report released today.

The report, prepared by analysts three years after the abortive coup, said President Sukarno might have encouraged the move to seize control of his Government because he viewed the army as an increasing threat to his power.

The coup, in which six senior generals were murdered, collapsed when President Sukarno failed to give it his support, the report said.

The coup was smashed by the army, which later suggested that President Sukarno had played a role in it.

The C.I.A. report was released by the House of Representatives' subcommittee on future foreign policy headed by Lester L. Wolff, Nassau Democrat.

The tank was manned by members of the force of Moslem deserters known as the Lebanese Arab Army. A seaside artillery battery of the regular Lebanese Army also opened fire and, according to witnesses, almost hit an incoming Middle East Airlines 747 jumbo jet.

"They've been repelling the Sixth Fleet almost daily," said one American, alluding to Lebanese leftist and Palestinian allegations that American warships were in Lebanese waters.

On Monday, a Syrian torpedo boat fired on the Cheshire Venture, a British container ship.

The Cheshire Venture was sailing from the Syrian port of Tartus toward the northern Lebanese port of Tripoli when the Syrian craft opened fire, hitting it seven times.

The British Government protested to Damascus.

The Syrians, who have in the past armed a large number of factions in the Lebanese civil war, are reported to have cut off overland supplies to Lebanese leftists. The Syrians now appear to be attempting to prevent any arms or munitions from reaching he leftists by sea.

Tomorrow, another mediator in the civil war, Georges Gorse, a French expert on Arab affairs, will arrive in Beirut, presumably to complement the mediation efforts of L. Dean Brown, the special American envoy.

'Proof of French Concern'

Special to The New York Times

PARIS, April 7—Information Minister André Rossi, reporting that Mr. Gorse would go to Beirut tomorrow, stressed that he had not been named as a mediator but would make all "necessary contacts" to assure that "the cease-fire remains effective, that institutions are consolidated and that peace exists."

Mr. Gorse is "living proof of French concern for Lebanon," the spokesman said. France held a League of Nations mandate over Lebanon until the end of World War II.

The decision, disclosed after a Cabinet meeting, was clearly a response to an appeal by President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt that former Foreign Minister Maurice Couve de Murville be sent to Lebanon as a mediator.

Mr. Couve de Murville undertook a 10-day mission in Beirut last November but it was fruitless.

President Sadat appears to want French intercession as a way of freezing Syria out of a decisive role in Lebanon.

Paris and Bonn Socialists Act to Align Their Policies

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, April 7—The French and West German Socialist Parties, long at odds, have established joint working groups in an effort to bring their policies into closer alignment.

The parties have skirted the key issues of whether to work in coalition with their nations' Communist Parties. But the effort also seemed aimed at providing support for the French Socialists if they should win power in alliance with the Communists, and then have trouble with their partners.

The French are also playing an important role in the effort by Common Market Socialist Parties to draw up a joint program for elections to a European Parliament, scheduled for 1978 but unlikely to be held by that time.

Four Policy Groups Formed

Eight of the Common Market's Socialist Parties met in Brussels late last week and agreed in principle to write a platform together. The British Labor Party did not attend, and it was not clear whether it would remain absent or was simply waiting for its leadership election to be completed and the new Prime Minister to take over.

The group established four commissions on major policy fields, agreed on future sessions and set this winter as target date for a draft document that would then be submitted to a conference of their parties next year.

Jacques Delors, who represented French Socialists at the meeting, said the group was impelled by the moves of European liberals and the conservative Christian Democrats toward closing ranks to campaign in the European elections.

The Brussels meeting took place at the same time as the Common Market leadership conference in Luxembourg, a generally recognized fiasco in which the leaders failed to reach any agreement and left depressed about the chances for any effective European unity. They were not even able to allocate seats for the future European Parliament, putting the plan for elections in doubt.

But the partisan drive for cooperation in Europe has developed into a curious countercurrent to the strains, political as well as economic, that are pulling Western Europe apart. National parties of the three major tendencies—left, center and right—are getting together to coordinate their positions.

The French-West Germany Socialist effort is particularly important because the two parties represent almost the opposite ends of opinion among modern Social Democrats. The decision to press toward cooperation was made last month when François Mitterrand, head of the French Socialist Party, visited the German Socialist leader Willy Brandt in Bonn.

They set up three working groups to draft policy: one on the future of Europe headed by Jean-Pierre Cot of France and Hans-Jürgen Wischnewski, a minister in the West German Foreign Office; one on third world affairs, with Lionel Jospin and Egon Bahr; West German Minister of Development; the third on economic and social policy, with Jacques Delors and Herbert Ehrenberg, a deputy in the West German Parliament.

After the meeting with Mr. Mitterrand, Mr. Brandt said that the sensitive issue of cooperation with Communists was discussed only "insofar as it is an important subject in French politics."

At Elsinore last January, however, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt had a vehement argument with Mr. Mitterrand on that very issue during the meeting of European Socialist leaders. Mr. Schmidt did not see Mr. Mitterrand when the French leader was in Bonn, perhaps out of deference to President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, although the talks with Mr. Brandt as party leader did include West German Socialists who hold Government office.

Cool feelings and a growing rift between Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Brandt are the talk of European chancelleries these days, and one Western European leader said recently that he felt that Mr. Brandt was pulling the German Socialists toward a kind of neutralism. Mr. Mitterrand has attacked Mr. Schmidt publicly, saying that the Chancellor governs "from the right."

Despite warnings by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and other American officials, it seems certain that the French Socialist-Communist alliance will hold firmly until after legislative elections, due in 1978. Both parties are convinced that it is their only chance of coming to power.

The prospect of Communists in the Governments of France and Italy are frightening to West German policymakers, however. They may hope that by moving closer to the French Socialists on ideological issues now, they will have some influence in bolstering them against Communist pressures if the left comes to power in France.

"Ships of the U.S. Sixth Fleet set off for Lebanese shores. Senator Jackson, who won notoriety as a rabid opponent of the relaxation of international tension, is openly calling for the landing of U. S. marines on Lebanese soil."

It is clear, the paper added, that there is a "dangerous relapse of the fully bankrupt 'position of strength' policy that some political circles dream of reviving."

The reference was evidently to President Ford's recent remarks that he preferred the phrase "peace through strength" to the word "détente" as a description of American policy toward the Soviet Union.

The Pravda article was reported by Tass, the official Soviet press agency.

The afrticle hailed as "a positive element" the present cease-fire in Lebanon and Syria's mediation role in the Lebanese conflict.

"Nevertheless, the situation in the country remains tense," the article continued. "The danger of another outburst, fraught with still graver consequences for Lebanon, for the entire Middle East, has not been eliminated."

The expression of concern over possible American moves comes after a question was addressed to the State Department by the Soviet Embassy in Washington over the meaning of reported movements in the area by American naval vessels.

The Soviet view of the conflict in Lebanon is that it is less a struggle between Moslems and Christians for control than an effort "to divert the Arabs' attention from the struggle for the liberation of the Israeli-occupied Arab territories, to deal a blow at the Palestinian resistance movement.

The Pravda article called the normalization of the situation in Lebanon "an important factor in the rallying of the front of Arab forces" struggling against Israel.

Health Care in the East German Way

By CRAIG R. WHITNEY
Special to The New York Times

GENTHIN, East Germany — Helga Köllner, a conductor on the state railway, came back to the day-care center the other evening and found that her year-old son, Nico, had come down with influenza in an epidemic that is sweeping East Germany.

She took a day off and brought the baby to the Genthin Polyclinic, where Dr. Gerhard Wojna examined Nico and prescribed medicine. He also gave Mrs. Köllner a written excuse from work for five days.

"After that, if the baby is still sick, I'll go to the day-care center to treat him," Dr. Wojna said.

Mrs. Köllner will not have to pay for prescriptions, medicine, or treatment, and her five days off do not count against vacation time. "We just take it for granted," she said.

The East German health system is widely regarded as the most advanced in the Communist world. It is also considered a model by the West Germans, whose less comprehensive program is threatening to become impossibly expensive.

"Our health system is financially healthy," said Dr. Günter Kuntze, the labor union official and Communist Party member who heads the social security system for the district of Magdeburg, the Government administrative center for Genthin. "It covers everybody, it covers everything, and every patient is given the best possible treatment, no matter what it costs."

Beneath the surface, though, it is not so simple.

East German workers pay 10 percent of their monthly salaries for social security, which includes the health insurance, pension contributions, and the like, up to a maximum of $24 a month. If they want, they can increase their pensions by paying up to $48 a month. Their factories make a matching contribution. For most people, the system is administered by the Communist trade union organization.

But mandatory contributions are not enough to finance the system. The East German Government will have to pump more than $3 billion worth into it this year to make up the deficit, Dr. Kuntze said, and over the next five years it will have to make up $16.2 billion in deficits.

And there are relics of the past. The clinic in Genthin, for instance, has no hospital beds. It sends nonambulatory patients across the street to a hospital that is run by a charity of the Evangelical Church of Germany, the largest German Protestant denomination.

"We just send patients over and the social security system pays the church hospitals just the same as the state-run ones," said the clinic's chief physician, Dr. Heinrich Gröning. "There's no problem about that."

Of the 584 hospitals in East Germany, 52 are run by the Evangelical Church and 37 by the Roman Catholic Church. And churchmen say there are indeed "problems." One said, "They get payments from the state, on a patient-per-day basis, but it's not enough to invest in new equipment or to pay the staff decently."

Nuns working in a Catholic hospital near Leipzig, for example, get a state salary of only $120 a month. "We depend on financial support from West Germany to keep these hospitals going," a church official said.

An East Berliner who has been in and out of hospitals in recent years asked, "If it's a classless system, then why do they have a special 'government hospital' on Scharnhorststrasse?" an extensive hospital for high officials and party functionaries is being built in the Buch suburb of East Berlin, the Berliner said. "The best hospital," he went on, "is for the police and the secret service people. If I could, I'd go there for treatment." The hospital is near the border with West Berlin.

"But still," this critic concluded, "the system here is better than what you have in the United States."

Since they do not cost patients anything, long hospital stays here are common. According to Dr. Gröning, nearly all childbirths in East Germany now take place in hospitals and the average stay for a new mother is 8 to 10 days.

"Every patient can choose his own doctor," he said, "and money is no consideration."

Of the 14 doctors in the clinic here, more than half are women — Dr. Wojna's wife, Sabine, is one of them. Doctors' salaries, fixed by the state, range from $90 to $150 a week, Dr. Gröning said.

These low pay scales have two major consequences. One is that physicians are often found among those who try to escape to the West. Another, though, is that the East German system is in better financial condition than West Germany's, which is heading toward such a huge deficit that services may have to be cut next year, or rates will have to be raised to unacceptably high levels.

"Dynamite."

That's what they called this designer's very first collection

Young Richard Assatly was pronounced "star of the day" at New York's summer ready-to-wear showings. Besides "dynamite" professional critics used words like "exciting", "fabulous", "just marvelous" and "very young."

So, of course, his clothes are at Altman's. And (also of course) we called Richard to see what he has to say for himself about fashion. And women. And life.

Turns out he has some refreshing ideas indeed. We'll quote you a few.

On his ideal woman: I design for a woman with a strong, vivacious personality. She doesn't need fussy clothes to boost her ego.

On femininity: True femininity is not fluffy, nor fancy, nor flouncy.

On life styles: Today's woman doesn't have an army around to dress her. Her clothes should be easy to wear, easy to move in, easy to care for.

On function: I like clean, simplified lines.

On prices: A woman must get her money's worth. I always strive for quality. In detailing. In finishing. In workmanship.

On accessories: Don't wear the kitchen sink.

On Altman's: It's a landmark that keeps growing. I always feel comfortable in that store. It's friendly place.

And this sketch is an exact example of Richard's fresh thinking. It's soft and feminine with those puffy sleeves and full skirt cinched by a wide belt. Yet it looks crisp and clean too, because this glowy polyester and cotton is menswear striped in cool sky blue and white. For sizes 4 to 12, at 80.00.

And you're most cordially invited to spend a refreshing few minutes today in our Designer's Shop on three. From 12:30 till 2, we're having informal modeling of designs by Richard Assatly for Gino Snow, Ltd.

P.S. Today's B-Day for Richard, so instead of a singing telegram, we'll send him this page of the "Times" and sign it "Happy Birthday, dear Richie" from everybody here at the landmark.

Foes Frustrated as Rhodesians Exhibit Confidence

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN
Special to The New York Times

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, April 7—Despite mounting foreign pressures on Rhodesia's white minority Government, Prime Minister Ian D. Smith is continuing to hold adamantly and confidently to the reins of power and so far none of the apocalyptic scenarios advanced in the wake of the Angolan war have developed here.

News Analysis

At the same time, leaders of neighboring black African countries are showing their frustration with the bickering and fragmented Rhodesian nationalist factions, which have so far failed to gain concessions through either negotiations or military means. And there are recurrent reports that the African heads of state are now throwing their support behind a group of younger military leaders based in Mozambique and withdrawing support from the two major nationalist groups, headed by Joshua Nkomo and Bishop Abel Muzorewa.

The most recent example of this frustration has been the call issued by President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia, a proponent of a peaceful and negotiated settlement, asking that Britain, against whose authority Mr. Smith's Government rebelled 10 years ago, send troops, arrest the leaders here and install a transitional government that would turn over power and independence to all the people of this country.

At the same time, President Kaunda urged a campaign of sabotage here in Rhodesia by the black workers who during the long years of international sanctions have been the foundation of a still-thriving economy.

British Action Unlikely

Given the political realities of a hard-pressed Britain, many of whose people have friends and relatives in Rhodesia, and the political realities of Rhodesia, where there has not been a single act of urban terror or even passive resistence in three years, one suggestion seems as unrealistic as the other.

But it reflects Mr. Kaunda's genuine desire to avoid wide-scale racial conflict and war in southern Africa that could, he fears, involve the major powers. Meanwhile, President Julius K. Nyerere of Tanzania, who has talked tougher than Mr. Kaunda, giving up some time ago on the possibility of a negotiated settlement with Mr. Smith, has also shown signs of disgust with the leadership of the various factions of nationalists.

Mr. Nyerere said a few weeks ago that none of the prominent men involved were the true leaders, and that the guerrillas training in Mozambique for armed struggle were responsible to a younger group of military activists.

The strategy of the African heads of state united in their opposition to the Smith Government has long been to bring enough external pressure to bear on his landlocked country to force the regime to come to terms and provide full political rights for the nearly six million people.

At first there were the sanctions approved by the United Nations Security Council, which led Prime Minister Harold Wilson to say that the collapse of the rebellious regime here was "a matter of weeks, not months."

Instead, with the support of South Africa and through the ingenuity of international bootleggers, the sanctions were largely contravened. Even today, with neighboring Mozambique finally sealing its long border and with South Africa markedly less supportive of Rhodesia than it has been, there is no shortage of goods Renaults, products of a French state-owned company, are rolling off assembly lines in Umtali. Coca-cola, Kodak film and pharmaceuticals are all plentiful, and Rhodesian agricultural exports are still making their way to world markets.

The emphasis on outside pressure shifted somewhat in the aftermath of Portugal's decision to give independence to its colonies, and even more after the victory of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola, with Soviet and Cuban aid.

The widely held assumption in black African countries was that the black nationalists, spurted by the events in Angola and able now to maintain bases just across the Rhodesian border in Mozambique, could intensify their struggle against Rhodesian forces. It was also thought that the threat of Soviet assistance to the nationalists would sap the morale of white Rhodesia.

Soviet Role Uncertain

While all these consequences remain possible, none have yet appeared. There is some division of opinion among African countries whether large-scale Soviet involvement would be a help or an embarrassment. Some Africans are saying privately that unless Rhodesian blacks take the initiative in their own liberation, their chances of maintaining any sort of viable government remain slim.

Then, too, there is the question of Soviet interests. Recently the British Foreign Ministry announced that it had been assured that the Soviet Union was not planning to intervene directly here.

Through their efforts in Angola, the Russians have succeeded in removing Chinese influence from the various nationalist camps. Having done that, will they now risk further deterioration of détente and a possible stiffening of South African support for Rhodesia by the same kind of involvement they had in Angola? Or would it better serve Moscow to have Rhodesia remain a mobilibing point for Africa, while the Russians supply training and arms for a conflict that is still some time in the future.

There is also the possibility of concerted military action by African states. Mozambique does not have the capacity for direct military involvement, but other countries such as Nigeria do. In Nigeria there has long been a political drive for an assertion of continental leadership and it is not beyond possibility that the country that has Africa's largest army might send "volunteers."

More Clashes With Guerrillas

There is another possible course of events. The guerrilla war here has been going on for three years, with 744 alleged guerrillas and 92 members of the Rhodesian forces killed. In recent months there have been more clashes between the two sides.

Militarily the advantage has continued to lie with the Rhodesian Government's forces, a standing army of 5,000 men, half of whom are black, and a reserve that numbers 2,500. But as talks with one nationalist faction collapsed and appeals for armed struggle increased, mobilization demands increased too.

With Rhodesia having a total white population of 270,000 and a maximum white reserve potential of perhaps 30,000, the mobilization is severely straining the civilian economy. Young men are now being called up for month-long tours of duty every two or three months. Women are being urged to fill jobs vacated by men in service.

Morale is eroding, though the Government is countering this with a radio and television campaign aimed at what is called "the psychological war." The main aim of this campaign is to emphasize that Rhodesia is not Angola.

Spain to Pension the Disabled On the Losing Side In Civil War

By HENRY GINIGER
Special to The New York Times

MADRID, April 7—The Spanish Government decreed pensions today for those disabled veterans of the Civil War who fought against the forces of Franco four decades ago.

Pensions for veterans of Franco's Nationalist forces have been provided through legislation, but the Spanish Parliament regularly refused help for former members of the Republican Army until last year, when the Defense Committee adopted a motion that opened the way for the present decree.

It applies to those who do not qualify for membership in the "Corps of Mutilated Gentlemen-of the War for the Fatherland"—those who fought in the so-called "national uprising" led by Franco. A distinction thus continues to be made between one side and the other.

There are estimated to be 10,000 disabled Republican veterans in Spain and southern France.

Exiles' Return Invited

The Government's decree, providing for financial help whose amount is to depend on the degree of disability regardless of the veteran's economic condition, appeared to reflect a desire to attenuate the divisions that arose during the Civil War 40 years ago and still persist.

In the same vein, the thousands of Republicans who fled Spain on their defeat in 1939 and have since lived in exile have been invited to return. Hundreds have done so, either to visit or to stay.

Spanish passports have been freely issued to what are called "the historic exiles" — those who refused to return to Spain during Franco's rule.

In one important field, however, the Government has recognized that the attitudes of the Civil War are still strong. Its refusal to consider legalizing the Communist Party is to a large extent due to the hostility that the party evokes among those who participated in "the crusade" against Communists during the Civil War.

Members of the Republican Army who stayed in Spain and survived the purges of the post-war years have always felt like outcasts. The other veterans have always been a close part of the regime and are active as a pressure group in trying to halt deviations from the system that was established as a result of their victory.

Nigeria Cancels Invitation to Kissinger

By JOHN DARNTON
Special to The New York Times

LAGOS, Nigeria, April 7—An invitation to Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to visit Nigeria during his trip to Africa later this month has been canceled by the Government.

No specific reason was given to Washington other than that the timing of Mr. Kissinger's trip was inconvenient for Nigeria, sources here said.

It was thought that the cancellation might be related to Nigeria's internal political situation, which is still uneasy after an attempted coup seven weeks ago that led to the assassination of the head of state, Gen. Murtala Ramat Muhammed.

But the cancellation also comes at a time when relations between Nigeria and the United States have become strained, initially because the two countries supported opposing factions in the Angolan civil war.

Visit May Have Been Protested

Recently, the Secretary of State's warnngs to Cuba not to intervene militarily in a confrontation between guerrillas and the Government of Ian D. Smith in Rhodesia have been widely condemned in the Nigerian press.

Mr. Kissinger has become a controversial figure here — he is often depicted as advocating an American policy favoring white minority regimes in southern Africa over black nationalist movements—and it is likely that his presence would have prompted demonstrations. Security precautions alone would have created an additional problem for the government.

Since last July, when the Government of Gen. Yakubu Gowon was ousted in a coup, Nigeria has increasingly adopted an activist foreign policy. Its main initiative is outspoken support for majority rule in South-West Africa, Rhodesia and South Africa.

Scholars Meeting Canceled

Just this week, Lieut. Gen. Olusegun Obasanjo, the new head of state, announced that "material, financial and other assistance" to nationalist movements would be stepped up.

"We will help those African countries whose independence and sovereignty are still threatened by racist and minority regimes," he said.

Anti-Western feeling erupted in the aftermath of the coup attempt on Feb. 13, stemming from unsubstantiated charges of Western involvement. Student demonstrators stormed the American Embassy and the British High Commission on Feb. 17. The feeling has not altogether died down.

A meeting of the African Regional American Studies Conference, involving 80 scholars who were to meet in Lagos last week in connection with the American Bicentennial celebration, was canceled without explanation by the Nigerian Government.

The invitation to Mr. Kissinger was originally extended last September, when he met Brig. Joseph Garba, the Nigerian Commissioner for External Affairs, at the United Nations General Assembly. Since then, Mr. Kissinger has met several times with Brigadier Garba, usually to patch up differences.

Mr. Kissinger was scheduled to arrive here on May 2 and stay for about 24 hours, on a swing that was to take him to at least eight African countries, including Ghana, the Ivory Coast, Zaire and Zambia.

In Lusaka, Zambia, he is expected to deliver a major statement on United States policy toward southern Africa. At another, unspecified, stop, he is expected to outline policy toward the continent as a whole.

Some Leaders in Community Mental Health Ask Changes in Psychiatric Care Provided in Progra

By NANCY HICKS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 7 — A number of leaders in the community mental health movement have concluded that changes are needed in the psychiatric care provided under such programs.

The primary concern of the group, voiced last week at an international symposium in New York, was to rid the public of the notion—a notion its members admitted they created—that the practice of "dumping" former state mental patients into communities that did not have services to care for them was community mental health.

There was also general agreement among the group that schizophrenics should probably not be encouraged to leave the hospital, but should be given a sheltered home that provided "humane care."

About 50 psychiatrists and mental health researchers came to these conclusions at the Fourth International Symposium of the Kittay Scientific Foundation, which was entitled "A Critical Appraisal of Community Psychiatry."

A Shift in Services

The group agreed that the concept of community mental health was a good one, but that money problems, professional infighting and lack of a clear mission had created public misconceptions and at times bad policy judgments that had harmed the people meant to be served.

"It is not possible for me to discern what went wrong," said Dr. Gerald Klerman, professor of psychiatry at Harvard Medical School.

"Perhaps the mental health movement grew overambitious and too quickly expanded its responsibility in the late 1960's into alcoholism, drug abuse, racism and social unrest withlems of the schizophrenics, one lems of the schizorhrenics, one of our primary clinical obligations, had been met."

The community mental health movement has stressed a shift in mental health services from state hospitals to community-based centers. The shift was made possible by the development in the 1950's of tranquilizers, which allowed thousands of ill people to leave state hospitals and assume a life in the community.

The idea was given impetus in 1963 when President Kennedy called for the end of "warehousing" of the mentally ill in large hospitals and for the creation of 4,500 community mental health centers.

New Type of Care

Legislation was passed that year and a program begun. In the last decades, the state mental hospitals have discharged half of their 450,000 resident patients. At the same time, the Federal Government cut back on funds for the community program, and only 500 of the planned centers have been built.

"We have succeeded in breaking the back of the asylum system," said Dr. Frank Ochberg, director of the Division of Mental Health Service Programs of the National Institute of Mental Health.

Others, while agreeing with him, said that one category of the mentally ill—the schizophrenics—had not fared well. Some of them, after their discharge from the hospital, committed antisocial acts.

Dr. Heinz Lehman, professor of psychiatry at McGill University in Montreal, said that thought should be given to setting up a new and different type of sheltered care for schizophrenics.

Dr. George Serban, the medical director of the Kittay Scientific Foundation, presented the results of a study he made at Bellevue Hospital in New York. The study found that 70 percent of a group of 516 chronic schizophrenics were not taking medication or seeing a doctor while they were out of the hospital, and an equal number had multiple readmissions to the hospital in a two-year follow up.

Of the returning patients, 42 percent were readmitted because they committed antisocial acts, not because they were having personal crises, Dr. Serban said.

"Many of these patients most—don't define themselves as sick," said Dr. Lewis C. Kolb, Commissioner of New York State Department of Mental Hygiene. He has pointed a study group to draw new criteria for discharging resident patients.

Senate Aide Discounts Impact Callaway Had on Resort Ruling

WASHINGTON, April 7 (AP)—There is no positive evidence that Howard H. Callaway's efforts to expand his Colorado ski resort influenced a Forest Service decision paving the way for the expansion, according to a Senate investigator.

A Senate subcommittee opens hearings tomorrow into the tactics used by Mr. Callaway, President Ford's former campaign chairman, to try to expand his Crested Butte ski resort to a nearby federally owned mountain.

Owen J. Malone, chief investigator for the panel, said today, in a memorandum to subcommittee members, that contacts between Mr. Callaway and Federal officials, while he served as Army Secretary, were "clearly readable as having intensified attention at the Washington level of the Forest Service to the Crested Butte issue."

He added, "The record can be read as inferring that some direction may have passed from Washington to the region respecting the content of the plan. However, the investigation to date has uncovered no positive evidence that his was the case."

A copy of the memorandum, expected to be released tomorrow at a meeting of the Senate Environment and Land Resources Subcommittee, was obtained tonight by The Associated Press.

The subcommittee is trying to determine whether Mr. Callaway used "undue influence" as Army Secretary in winning a Forest Service reversal of tentative plans to put off his proposed expansion of the ski resort.

Mr. Callaway resigned as chief of Mr. Ford's election campaign in the aftermath of published reports that he met in his Pentagon office last July 3 with officials of the Agriculture Department and Forest Service to argue for expansion of his ski resort onto Federal land.

Regional Forest Service officials had previously opposed the move, but late last year the Forest Service reversed the earlier position and gave tentative approval to the expansion plan.

Mr. Malone said that, based on his investigation, there was little doubt that Forest Service officials in the Denver region were aware of the pressure being exerted by Mr. Callaway through Richard Ashworth, Deputy Under Secretary of Agriculture.

However, he noted that the Forest Service officials denied this had been a consideration in their decision.

Mr. Callaway owns a two-thirds interest in the Crested Butte Development Corporation. Most of the remaining stock is owned by his brother-in-law, Ralph O. Walton.

House Adopts a 5-Year Census, But With Redistricting Every 10

By RICHARD L. MADDEN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 7—The House, after allaying fears that its members might face more frequent redistricting, approved today a bill that in effect would authorize a census of the country's population every five years instead of every 10.

The measure, which would establish a mid-decade census starting in 1985 in addition to the regular census every decade provided for in the Constitution, was passed by voice vote. The bill contains a provision prohibiting use of the five-year census to redraw congressional districts.

The Senate has approved a much different measure requiring that, instead of a mid-decade census, the latest population estimates of the Census Bureau be used in the Federal aid programs that are based in part on population. A Senate-House conference is expected to try to reconcile the two bills.

National Mobility a Factor

Congress has considered proposals for a mid-decade census since the early 1960's on the theory that the mobile population quickly makes the information obtained in the decennial census outdated.

They have bogged down, however, because of political considerations. The representatives, whose districts are based on population and are redrawn after each decennial census, feared that a mid-decade census could subject them to redistricting every five years.

To meet that objection, proponents of the bill, led by Representative Patricia Schroeder, Democrat of Colorado, accepted an amendment barring mid-decade census redistricting.

Lawmakers from areas with declining population, such as New York and other northeastern cities, have also been concerned that their areas could lose Federal aid, since some Federal programs allocate aid to states and localities in part on population.

Mrs. Schroeder said that a census would be a more accurate way to count low-income persons eligible for a number of other Federal aid programs than would interim surveys or estimates made by the Census Bureau.

The House also approved, 248 to 140, an amendment by Representative John M. Ashbrook, Republican of Ohio, deleting from the bill all penalties for persons who refuse to answer census questions.

These penalties, which include a maximum fine of $1,000 and up to one year in jail, have seldom been enforced. Mrs. Schroeder had argued that a nominal penalty should be retained as an incentive to obtain accurate information.

int submitted by e charges that:

Representative owner of 1,000 shares of stock in Fairchild Industries, voted for passage of a defense appropriations bill that funded a contract worth in excess of $73 million with Fairchild. His failure to abstain from voting on legislation in which he had a direct pecuniary interest was a violation of House Rule VIII (8)."

¶"In 1961-62, Representative Sikes sponsored legislation enacted by Congress which removed restrictions on the commercial development of land in Florida on which he and several business associates held a 99-year lease. From 1962 through at least 1972 the company in which he had stock received income from that land. In using his position as a member of Congress in this way, and receiving a benefit for himself, Representative Sikes has violated House Rule XLIII (3) and Section 5 of the Code of Ethics for Government service."

The section of the ethics code cited prohibits persons in Government service from benefiting from special favors, while the House rules cited deal with a requirement that members identify their business interests, and forbid voting on legislation in which a member might have a "pecuniary interest."

Last October, the Navy reprimanded two retired admirals for their role in setting up the First Navy bank at the Pensacola Naval Air Station. The bank was established on Oct. 24, 1973, and Representative Sikes was an intial stockholder. His actions constituted a violation of House Rule XLIII (3) and Section 5 of the Code of Ethics for Government service."

¶Representative Sikes urged the responsible state and Federal Government officials to authorize the establishment of a 10 warplanes. The Florida land transaction centered on property once used by the Army.

After summarizing the complaints, Mr. Gardner said, "We recommend to the ethics committee that the House censure [Mr. Sikes] and remove him from his assignment to the House Committee on Appropriations."

He noted, however, that during its nine years of existence "the committee has a perfect record of never having carried out a formal investigation of any member of the House."

The action taken by Common Cause involves a mechanism originated by the House in 1967 through which a complaint by an outside party may be transmitted by a Representative to the House itself.

"To our knowledge, this is the first time that this procedure has ever been used," Mr. Gardner said.

Representative Andrew Maguire, Democrat of New Jersey, drafted the letter of transmittal and was instrumental in lining up 44 co-sponsors, including three Republicans.

Mr. Maguire said "some gentle approaches" were made to the Democratic leadership to join the others and that the very lack of action led to the letter of transmittal.

"The reputation of the House in the public esteem is at stake here," Mr. Maguire said, adding "evasion of such complaints simply cannot be tolerated."

The New Jersey Democrat said he would personally deliver a copy of the complaints to the ethics committee tomorrow. Attempts to reach the committee chairman, Representative John J. Flynt, Democrat of Georgia, were unsuccessful.

Hua, Regarded as Moderate, Abstained From Anti-Teng Dr

Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Thursday, April 8—A tall Chinese leader about whom little is known has emerged as an apparent compromise choice to end the leadership fight that followed the death of Prime Minister Chou En-lai in January.

Hua Kuo-feng, who was named Acting Prime Minister on Feb. 7, was appointed Prime Minister and First Deputy Chairman of the Chinese Communist Party yesterday. There appeared to be some signs that Mr. Hua is not keen to follow the policy of the party radicals who pressed a so-called anti-rightist campaign against Mr. Chou's choice, Teng Hsiao-ping, now dismissed from all his posts.

For example, the Communist Party organization of Hunan Province, of which Mr. Hua is first secretary, has adopted a distinctly lukewarm attitude toward the campaign against what the radicals have denounced as those who wish to follow a "capitalist road."

While some party organizations have held special meetings to criticize Mr. Teng and other so-called rightists, the Hunan group has not done so. In fact, no party leader of any stature in Hunan has publicly associated himself with the campaign.

Furthermore, when Mr. Hua was appointed Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of public Security in January of last year, the choice was made by the fourth National People's Congress, a congress dominated by party moderates.

So little is known publicly about Mr. Hua that although he had been Acting Prime Minister since early February of this year, his age is still given variously as the mid-fifties or early sixties.

Identified '55 in Hunan

Since he made his early career in Chairman Mao Tse-tung's home district of Siangtan in Hunan Province, it has been assumed by some specialists that there is a special bond between the two men. However, it has recently come to light that Mr. Hua is not a native of Hunan but of Shansi Province, where he was party secretary of Chiaocheng, south of Taiyuan, back in 1947.

At that time, Mr. Teng was head of the Communist armies in the area, and hence Mr. Hua's boss in the chain of command. It is not clear what Mr. Hua's attitude is today toward his one-time superior.

Mr. Hua became party secretary of Siangtan in 1955. The following year, he was identified as director of culture and education of the Hunan Government.

Gradually, Mr. Hua gained a reputation as an expert in agriculture. In 1969, he became a member of the Party's Central Committee.

Recently there have been reports that Mr. Hua was involved in investigating what official Chinese accounts described as the conspiracy by former Defense Minister Lin Piao to assassinate Chairman Mao. The disgraced minister died in a plane crash in Mongolia.

Even after his appointment as Minister of Public Security, Mr. Hua retained a lively interest in agriculture. He delivered a major speech last October at a national conference that set the direction for the development of agriculture over the next five years.

Both Mr. Teng and Chiang Ching, Chairman Mao's wife, delivered speeches at the conference, but only that of Mr. Hua has been made public and has formed a basic text for agricultural development. Possibly, the speeches of Mr. Teng and Miss Chiang were considered to have been too "right" or too "radical," respectively.

The political line that Mr. Hua and his government will adopt is expected to be influenced by continued jockeying for power by the contending factions. Carrying a portrait of the late Prime Minister Chou En-lai, residents of Peking gathered on Tien An Men Square last Saturday to prepare for the Ching Ming Festival in remembrance of the dead. The floral wreaths seen here were removed by the authorities on Monday, triggering violent demonstrations that may have led to the ouster of Mr. Chou's expected successor, Teng Hsiao-ping. This photo, which became available yesterday, is unusual in that it shows an aspect of the backlash against the so-called antirightist campaign.

PEKING BELIEVED TO ACT HURRIEDLY

Politburo Reported to Meet in Emergency Session After Demonstrations

By FRANK CHING
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Thursday, April 8—China's surprise announcements last night of the simultaneous dismissal of the senior Deputy Prime Minister, Teng Hsiao-ping, and the promotion of Hua Kuo-feng to Prime Minister were made in the name of the Communist Party's Central Committee.

But the two brief resolutions circulated by Hsinhua, the official Chinese press agency, made clear that the decisions were reached in a hurry by the Politburo, a group of fewer than 20 people, who met in emergency sessions after the violent demonstrations held in Peking Monday.

According to Hsinhua, both resolutions were proposed by Chairman Mao Tse-tung and were agreed to "unanimously" by the Politburo, of which both Mr. Teng and Mr. Hua were members.

Ordinarily, the authority to appoint or discharge officials lies with the Central Committee. The situation was judged to be so critical that there was insufficient time to hold a Central Committee meeting. If that was the case, then the situation had deteriorated to an extent unsuspected by outside observers.

But it also appeared possible that the central committee, a much more unwieldy body of about 190 members, was so divided that it could not act forcefully.

The party constitution stipulates that when the Central Committee is not in session its powers can be assumed by the Politburo. While the national constitution declares that the Prime Minister is nominated by the party, technically it is necessary for a meeting of the National People's Congress to ratify Mr. Hua's appointment.

Analysts here were not surprised that Mr. Hua, who has been serving as Acting Prime Minister since Feb. 8, was named Prime Minister. But they were surprised by his leapfrogging over half a dozen senior officials in the party to become its First Deputy Chairman.

Most notably, Mr. Hua, a man whose allegiances and political preferences are a mystery, now outranks the young Shanghai radical Wang Hunh-Wen, who was catapulted into the highest echelons of the party in 1973 and who then appeared to be the chosen heir to Chairman Mao.

Compromise Seen

With the death of Prime Minister Chou En-Lai on Jan. 8, Mr. Wang has in effect been demoted. This lends credence to theory, held by many analysts here, that Mr. Hua is a compromise choice who is acceptable to both the radicals and the moderates.

The first hint that compromise had been reached between the party's so-called radicals and moderates appeared yesterday when Hsinhua, in an ostensibly routine dispatch, announced that Deputy Prime Minister Li Hsien-nien had received the new Laotian Ambassador.

This was the first public appearance since the Chou funeral by Mr. Li, an economic planner who was closely identified with the moderate policies of Mr. Chou and Mr. Teng.

Analysts here believe that Mr. Li and a number of other moderate leaders had gone into seclusion to express their distaste for the denunciations of Mr. Ten, whoc Mr. Chou had chosen as his successor. The re-emergence of Mr. Li, therefore, appeared to signify that an accommodation had been reached by the two factions.

If this theory is correct, it appears that the moderates agreed to sacrifice Mr. Teng while the radicals had to accept the demotion of Mr. Wang. The mild language of the resolution dismissing Mr. Teng also suggests that he had not totally lost support within the Politburo.

The resolution did not report charges that Mr. Teng was a "capitalist reader" and a "bourgeous Democrat," nor did it ven acuse him of being a "revisionist." Instead, it permitted hi mto keep his party membership "so as to see how he will behave himself in the future," thus seemingly leaving the door open for another rehabilitation.

The only explanation given for his dismissal was that the Politburo had discussed the "counter-revolutionary incident" at Tien An Men Square and Teng Hsiao-ping's Latest behavior," implying that Mr. Teng had in some way been responsible for the rioting.

By comparison, when Liu Shao-chi was dismissed as China's head of state during the Cultural Revolution almost 10 years ago, he was accused of being renegade and traitor and was expelled from the party "once and for all."

The comparatively lenient treatment of Mr. Teng appears to be another concession wrested by moderate party leaders from the radicals.

Analysts here believe that by personally proposing the dismissal of Mr. Teng, Chairman Mao invoked his own enormous prestige and was able to win the day. But it appeared likely that the radicals would much rather see members of their own faction as prime minister and first deputy chairman of the party.

China Names Hua as Prime Minis relatively unknown until he was named to the Politburo three years ago. Subsequently named to the powerful post of Minister of Public Security, he is believed to occupy the ideological middle ground, between the forces who backed Mr. Teng and the powerful radical group associated with Chiang Ching, Mr. Mao's wife.

Soon after the announcement, several truckloads of young people, beating drums, cymbals and gongs to celebrate the major change in their country's leadership, moved through the streets of downtown Peking.

Yet thousands of members of the militia could be seen encamped behind the walls of the Forbidden City where they had been brought Tuesday in anticipation of trouble.

Organized demonstrations supporting the leadership changes grew in size through the night. At 3 o'clock this morning, there were hundreds of trucks carrying music-making demonstrators back and forth through central Peking and beginning to fan out over the city.

Organized groups of marchers, some carrying red flags, appeared as if they had just been awakened and brought out on the streets for the occasion. As they marched around the perimeter of Tien An Men Square, monitors occasionally led them in chants. Some of the demonstrators, frequently sleepy looking, had been brought from nearby neighborhoods. Others were members of the militia who had come out of the Forbidden City for the occasion.

The appointment of Mr. Hua and the toppling of Mr. Teng resolves, at least partly and temporarily, the political struggle that has raged among China's elite since the death of Premier Chou. Both actions, the announcements said, were proposed by Chairman Mao and unanimously adopted by the Politburo of the Communist Party's Central Committee, a body of apparently no more than 18 persons.

Mr. Hua, who comes from Shansi Province, was not well known, even in China, until he was made Acting Prime Minister after the death of Chou En-lai earlier this year.

Mr. Hua's promotion has been as dramatic and sudden as Mr. Teng's downfall. Mr. Teng was widely considered to be Mr. Chou's natural successor. But instead he disappeared from sight after a memorial ceremony for Mr. Chou and was soon being condemned as a "capitalist roader."

Complete Victory Unlikely

Although Mr. Teng was the most prominent "moderate" leader in China, the political shake-up by no means appears to spell victory for the radicals. Some Western observers saw the events as a historic compromise weighted slightly in favor of the moderates.

Mr. Hua himself cannot be readily identified as either a moderate or a radical. His appointment as First Deputy Chairman of the Communist Party, however, automatically demotes Wang Hung-wen, the young Shanghai radical who previously ranked next to Chairman Mao.

Another indication of continuing strength of the moderates was the reappearance yesterday of Deputy Prime Minister Li Hsien-nien who was identified with Prime Chou En-lai and with M and who is considered a relatively pragmatic e planner.

The announcement by the Hsinhua Press charged that the entir to Prime Minister Chi began during the mid week and broke into when it was forcibly e the work of "a handfu enemies." These unna sons "engineered an premeditated and plan terrevolutionary incid report declared.

Texts on Peking Changes and Account of Disturbance

Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, April 7—Following are the texts of the announcement of the appointment of Hua Kuo-feng as First Vice Chairman of the Chinese Communist Party and Prime Minister, the announcement of the dismissal of Teng Hsiao-ping, and of the official account of the demonstrations Monday in Peking by Hsinhua, the Chinese press agency. The texts were provided in English by Hsinhua.

Appointment of Hua

Resolution of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China on the appointment of Comrade Hua Kuo-feng to be First Vice Chairman of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China and Premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China.

On the proposal of our great leader, Chairman Mao, the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China unanimously agrees to appoint Comrade Hua Kuo-feng First Vice Chairman of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China and Premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China.

Dismissal of Teng

Resolution of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China on dismissing Teng Hsiao-ping from all posts both inside and outside the party.

Having discussed the counterrevolutionary incident which took place at Tien An Men Square and Teng Hsiao-ping's latest behaviors, the political bureau of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China holds that the nature of the Teng Hsiao-ping problem has turned into one of antagonistic contradiction. On the proposal of our great leader, Chairman Mao, the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China unanimously agrees to dismiss Teng Hsiao-ping from all posts both inside and outside the party while allowing him to keep his party membership so as to see how he will behave himself in the future.

Hsinhua Account

Early April, a handful of class enemies, under the guise of commemorating the late Premier Chou during the Ching Ming Festival, engineered an organized, premeditated and planned counterrevolutionary political incident at Tien An Men Square in the capital. They flagrantly made reactionary speeches, posted reactionary poems and slogans, distributed reactionary leaflets and agitated for the setting up of counterrevolutionary organizations.

100,000 in Square

By means of insinuation and overt counterrevolutionary language, they brazenly clamored that "the era of Chin Shih Huang is gone."

Openly hoisting the ensign supporting Teng Hsiao-ping, they frenziedly directed their spearhead at our great leader, Chairman Mao, attempted to split the party Central Committee headed by Chairman Mao, tried to change the general orientation of the current struggle to criticize Teng Hsiao-ping and counterattack the right deviationist attempt at reversing correct verdicts, and engaged in counterrevolutionary activities.

The counterrevolutionary activities culminated on April 5. At about 8 A.M., a loudspeaker car of the municipal public security bureau was overturned, the body of the car and its loudspeakers smashed.

After 9 A.M., more than 10,000 people gathered in front of the Great Hall of the People. At its maximum the crowd at Tien An Men Square numbered about 100,000 people. Except for a handful of bad elements who were bent on creating disturbances, the majority of the people were passers-by who came over to see what was happening. Some of the people were around the Monument to the People's Heroes; the majority were concentrated on the west side of the square near the eastern gate of the Great Hall of the People.

A dozen young people were beaten up by some bad elements, receiving cuts and bruises on their heads with blood trickling down their swollen faces. The hooligans shouted: "Beat them to death! Beat them to death!" An army guard who tried to stop the hooligans by persuasion had his insignia pulled off, uniform torn and his face beaten to bleed. The bad elements exclaimed: "Who can put this situation under control? Nobody in the Central Committee can. Should he come today he would not be able to return!"

Their unbridled counterrevolutionary arrogance infuriated the masses, many of them saying: "Ever since liberation, Tien An Men Square has always been the place where our great leader, Chairman Mao, reviews parades of the revolutionary masses. We'll absolutely not tolerate such counterrevolutionary acts happening here!"

'Hooligans' Move In

Several hundred worker-militiamen who went up the flight of steps leading to the Great Hall of the People to stand guard were broken up into several sections by the hooligans. The latter repeatedly shouted reactionary slogans and savagely beat up anyone in the crowd who opposed them. Some of those who got beaten up were dragged to the monument and forced to kneel down and "confess their crimes."

At 11:05 A.M., many people surged toward the Museum of Chinese History on the east side of the Tien An Men Square. In front of the museum, a woman comrade came forward to dissuade them, and she was immediately manhandled.

At this moment, a bunch of bad elements besieged a People's Liberation Army barrack by the clock tower in the southeast corner of the square. They crushed the door, broke into the building and occupied it. A few bad elements, sporting a crew cut, took turns to incite the people, shouting themselves hoarse through a transistor megaphone.

Committee Inaugurated

Toward 12 o'clock, some of the troublemakers proclaimed the inauguration of what they called "Committee of the People of the Capital for Commemorating the Premier." A bad element wearing spectacles had the impudence to announce that the public security bureau must give its reply in 10 minutes. He threatened that if their demands were not met, they would smash the security department.

At 12:30, the P.L.A. fighters on guard duty at Tien An Men Square marched in formation toward their barrack to guard it. The bad elements who were making disturbances shouted in instigation: "The people's army should stand on the side of the people!" and "Those befuddled by others are innocent!"

Later, they overturned a Shanghai sedan car and set it on fire. The firemen and P.L.A. guards who came to the rescue were blocked, and a fire engine was wrecked. These bad elements said that putting out the fire meant "suppressing the mass movement." Several members of the fire brigade were beaten to bleed.

At 12:45, a detachment of people's police came as reinforcement. But they too were taunted and stopped. The caps of several policemen were snatched by the rioters and thrown to the air. Some even threw knives and daggers at the people's police. Several policemen were rounded up and assaulted.

In the afternoon, the sabotage activities of this handful of counterrevolutionaries became still more frenzied. They burned up four motor vehicles bringing water and food to the worker-militiamen on duty or belonging to the public security department.

Around 1700 [5 P.M.], this gang of bad elements again broke into the barrack, abducted and beat up the sentries, smashed windows and doors on the ground floor and looted everything in the rooms. Radios, quilts, bed sheets, clothing and books were all thrown into the fire by this gang of counterrevolutionaries. They also burned and smashed dozens of bicycles of the Peking worker-militiamen.

Black smoke belched into the sky amid a hubbub of counterrevolutionary clamors. Nearly all the window panes in the barrack were smashed. Then they set the barrack on fire.

The revolutionary masses showed utmost hatred for this counterrevolutionary political incident. Yet the handful of bad elements said glibly: "It manifests the strength of the masses." They went so far as to claim brazenly that "the situation has now got out of hand, it would be of no use even if a regiment or an army was called in," and so on and so forth, showing their unbridled reactionary arrogance.

Attacks on Mao

See how these counterrevolutionaries, using extremely decadent and reactionary language and the trick of insinuation, viciously attacked and slandered our great leader, Chairman Mao, and other leading comrades on the party central committee:

Devils howl as we pour out our grief,
We weep but the wolves laugh,
We split our blood in memory of the hero,
Raising our brows, we unsheathe our swords.
China is no longer the China of yore,
And the people are no longer wrapped in sheer ignorance,
Gone for good in Chin Shih Huang's feudal society,
We believe in Marxism-Leninism,
To hell with those scholars who ism!
What we want is genuine Marxism-Leninism.
For the sake of genuine Marxism-Leninism,
We fear not shedding our blood and laying down our lives,
The day modernization in our fields is realized,
We will come back to offer libations and sacrifices."

The clamors of these counterrevolutionaries about combating "Chin Shih Huang" and demanding "genuine Marxism-Leninism" were out-and-out counterrevolutionary agitation in the same vein as the language used in Lin Piao's plan for a counterrevolutionary coup d'état, "Outline of Project 571." By directing their spearhead at our great leader, Chairman Mao, and the party Central Committee headed by Chairman Mao, and lauding Teng Hsiao-ping's counterrevolutionary revisionist line, these counterrevolutionaries laid bare unmistakably their criminal aim to practice revisionism and restore capitalism in China.

In the past few days these elements not only wrote reactionary poems but plastered reactionary posters. They lauded Teng Hsiao-ping and attempted to nominate him to play the role of [Imre] Nagy, the chieftain of the counterrevolutionary incident in Hungary. They talked nonsense, alleging that "with Teng Hsiao-ping in charge of the work of the Central Committee, the struggle has won decisive victory "to the great satisfaction of the people throughout the country."

They uttered vile slanders, saying "the recent so-called antiright-deviationist struggle is the act of a handful of careerists to reverse verdicts." They openly opposed the great struggle initiated and led by Chairman Mao to repulse the right deviationist attempt to reverse correct verdicts; their counterrevolutionary arrogance was inflated to the utmost.

However, the time when these counterrevolutionary elements ran rampant coincided with the day of their downfall. Going against the will of the people, they were extremely isolated.

As these bad elements were making disturbances, perpetrating acts of violence and sabotage, many revolutionary people courageously stepped forward to denounce their counterrevolutionary acts and struggled against them. The Peking worker-militia, people's police and army guards on duty at the square and the revolutionary people present at the time worked in close cooperation, and fought bravely in defense of Chairman Mao, of the party Central Committee, Chairman Mao's revolutionary line and the great capital of our socialist motherland.

Barrack Set Afire

When the handful of bad elements again set fire to the barrack at 5 P.M., the army guards put out the fire at the risk of their own lives. To safeguard the Great Hall of the People, more than 100 Peking worker-militiamen were injured, a dozen of them seriously wounded. Six army guards were abducted and many wounded. Risking dangers, the people's police persevered in fighting.

Although the barrack was besieged and fire was engulfing the first floor, leading comrades of the Peking worker-militia command persevered in the struggle on the second floor. At this critical moment, the switchboard operator calmly reported the news to leading departments concerned.

At 6:30 P.M., after Comrade Wu Teh's speech was broadcast, most of the onlookers and the masses who had been taken in quickly dispersed. But a handful of counterrevolutionaries continued their desperate resistance and again posted some reactionary poems on the Monument to the People's Heroes.

Three hours later, on receiving an order from the Peking Municipal Revolutionary Committee, tens of thousands of worker-militiamen, in coordination with the people's police and P.L.A. guards, took resolute measures and enforced proletarian dictatorship. In high morale, the heroic Peking militiamen filed into Tien An Men Square valiently and mounted powerful counterattacks. They encircled those bad elements who were still creating disturbances and committing crimes in the vicinity of the Monument to the People's Heroes. They detained the active criminals and major suspects.

In the face of powerful proletarian distatorship, the handful of rioters could not withstand even a single blow. They squatted down, trembling like stray dogs. Some hurriedly handed over their daggers, knives and notebooks on which they had copied the reactionary poems. Several criminals who pulled out their daggers in a vain attempt to put up a last-ditch fight were duly punished.

The revolutionary masses and the people of the whole city supported and acclaimed the revolutionary action of the Peking worker-militia, the people's police and P.L.A. guards.

Shift in Peking Seems to Make Hua Eventual Successor to Mao

the fall of Liu Shao-chi in 1967 and the fall of Mr. Teng today —serves as a reminder that designated successors cannot count on succeeding in China.

Until today, Mr. Hua was not even a member of the standing commitee of the Politburo which normally has eight members. In being named as First Deputy Chairman, he was catapulted ahead of two prominent figures from Shanghai, Wang Hung-wen and Chang Chun-chiao, who are generally mentioned as leaders of the "radical grouping."

Chou Adviser Reappears

Further evidence of a compromise could be found in the reappearance of one of Mr. Chou's closest advisers, Li Hsien-nien. A Politburo member and a Deputy Premier, Mr. Li had not appeared in public since Jan. 16, the day after a memorial service for the late Prime Minister that proved to be Mr. Teng's last public appearance.

Today, as Mr. Teng was being stripped of all his government and party posts, Mr. Li emerged to receive the Laotian Ambassador to China. The announcement of an otherwise routine diplomatic encounter may well have been intended to reassure officials throughout the country who might have felt threatened by Mr. Teng's fall.

Mr. Li, as Finance Minister and China's leading economic planner, is closely identified with policies that the radicals have assailed as "revisionist." The fact that he retains his positions indicates an intention to maintain continuity in policies and to limit the purging to Mr. Teng.

The official announcement seemed to reflect the sense of urgency and even haste with which the top leadership had moved to prevent a recurrence of the popular protests that culminated on Monday in an attempt to set fire to the building in Peking that houses the Ministry of Public Security.

From the standpoint of the leadership, the most alarming aspect of the protest was not the rioting itself but the slowness with which the authorities in Peking moved to suppress it. This was especially the case since the protests could easily be interpreted within China as being against policies carried out in the name of Chairman Mao.

Evidence of haste could be found in the fact that Mr. Hua's elevation in the party was announced before its formal approval by the Central Committee. Similarly, the announcement that he was now fully confirmed in his position as Prime Minister came without the rubber-stamp approval of the National People's Congress, or its standing committee, which is technically required by the Constitution China promulgated only last year.

Mr. Hua was named Acting Prime Minister in February, a month after the death of Mr. Chou, who had served as Prime Minister since the Communists came to power in 1949. Mr. Hua is known to few foreigners but held an impressive array of posts, serving simultaneously as a Deputy Prime Minister, Minister of Public Security, the Politburo member with primary responsibility for agriculture and party leader in Chairman Mao's native province of Hunan.

His designation as successor to Mr. Chou came as a surprise, but that was only a routine promotion in comparison to his designation today as heir apparent to Chairman Mao, who is 82 years old and frail.

Choice Called Mao's

The official announcement stressed that the promotion came "on the proposal of our great leader, Chairman Mao." The same phrase was used to describe Mr. Teng's dismissal from all his posts.

This was in sharp contrast to the announcements in January 1975, after meetings of the Central Committee and the National People's Congress, that Mr. Teng had been named a Deputy Chairman of the party and that he ranked first among the 12 Deputy Prime Ministers. Mr. Mao had stayed away from those meetings and there was never any indication that he had approved of the decisions made at them.

Mr. Teng's rise and fall in the last year provides one of the most extraordinary episodes in the serpentine course of recent Chinese politics, for he has now risen twice and fallen twice. A decade ago, at the start of the Cultural Revolution, he was reviled as a "demon" and "freak" and purged from his post as secretary general of the Communist Party.

Teng Gets Full Blame

He was then absent from public view for more than six years, reappearing only on April 12, 1973. His second fall from grace—the result, it appears, of fears that he would attempt to settle scores with his tormentors of Cultural Revolution days—came in slightly less than three years.

The announcement of Mr. Teng's fall appeared to place the entire blame for Monday's "counterrevolutionary incidents" on his shoulders. Although he was allowed to retain his party membership, it was stated that "the Teng Hsiao-ping problem has turned into one of antagonistic contradiction" is central in Chairman Mao's political thought. In his best-known formulation on the subject, an "antagonistic contradiction."

The concept of "contradiction" is central in Chairman "contradiction among the people." In effect, the announcement branded Mr. Teng as a "class enemy," which means he will be an outcast until he offers a contrite confession.

However, there was no hint that Mr. Teng's followers might suffer the same fate.

Analysts speculated that the armed forces might have played a role in today's attempt at a resolution of the struggle, but that role and even the identity of the key military leaders in Peking continued to be cloaked in secrecy.

On the long list of unanswerable questions that can now be raised, the most interesting have to do with Chairman Mao himself. At his last meeting with a foreign visitor, he was reportedly too weakened to rise from his chair to bid his guest farewell. Yet the whole trend of recent events suggests that he is still able to play a decisive role.

The time in which this will continue to be the case is obviously limited. This his closest adherents remain under considerable pressure to reshape policies and the leadership while they can still count on his protection.

Hijackers Holding 76 on a Jet In Manila Let Deadline Pass

MANILA, Thursday, April 8 (UPI) — Three armed Moslem rebels who hijacked a domestic Philippine airlines jet backed down at dawn today from their second deadline, at which they had threatened to kill hostages, and instead allowed a doctor aboard to check the health of the 70 passengers.

But they also retracted an offer to release a woman and her six-month old child. [There were conflicting reports that the rebels had agreed to release the woman and child.]

A Philippine military spokesman, Lieut. Col. Pablo Gonzales, said: "There will be no ransom and no departure."

The jet pilot Arnulfo Santos, radioed that all the 70 passengers were safe, including one American, whom he identified as F. Schoeder, 12 women and nine children.

The hijackers took over the twin-engined BAC-11 jet early yesterday at the Cagayan de Oro provincial airport 490 miles south of Manila and ordered it flown to the capital.

The hijackers demanded $300,000, a pilot with international rating to fly them "westward," and the release of five prisoners held in Manila jails. They were believed to be armed with two grenades and two pistols. They requested a flight plan for Singapore.

The fascinating theory of biorhythm holds that the levels of your physical, emotional and intellectual conditions are cyclical. So if you know what level you're at, you're supposedly better able to meet a challenge, make a critical decision—or postpone it. Casio's Biolator makes your own levels for any given date as easy to calculate as 2 + 2.

Simply enter the date in question, followed by your own birthdate. Then interpret the three sets of digits that appear, using the permanent chart on the back of the Biolator.

The Casio Biolator has other convenient date functions as well. And also is handy for giving you answers to your more everyday math problems.

The unique Biolator, only from Casio, at Takashimaya today.

Most of Suffolk Sewer Line Held Faulty

By PRANAY GUPTE
Special to The New York Times

HAUPPAUGE, L. I., April 7—More than 60 percent of the major pipeline installed as part of the controversial $700 million Southwest Sewer District project was different from the design approved by the state, and some of it did not even meet the state's minimum standards, the chairman of the Suffolk County Legislature's Finance Committee charged today.

Displaying a confidential inspection report obtained from Bowe Walsh and Associates, the Long Island engineering concern that is supervising the project, the chairman, Robert Mrazek, Democrat of Centerport, also alleged that there were at least 20 leaks in every 1,000 feet of pipe.

Most of these leaks have been repaired, but their very existence indicates the use of material not up to state specifications, Mr. Mrazek contended.

"We are dealing with an engineering disaster here," Mr. Mrazek told his colleagues at a meeting of the 18-member County Legislature here this morning.

Then, turning toward Floyd S. Linton, a Democrat and the presiding officer of the Legislature, Mr. Mrazek said:

"We are going to have to go back to the drawing boards soon and pay for a new pipeline all over again."

Mr. Linton asked John M. Flynn, director of Suffolk's Department of Environmental Control, which administers the sewer project, to respond to Mr. Mrazek's charges.

"These attacks have gotten so ridiculous . . ." Mr. Flynn said when he was interrupted by Mr. Linton, who asked him whether Mr. Mrazek's charges were accurate.

"I don't know whether it's true," Mr. Flynn replied.

Mr. Mrazek's allegations are being investigated by the Suffolk District Attorney, who is also looking into why the cost of the project increased from $291 million in 1969 to the current estimate of $700 million.

Mr. Mrazek and others contend that after interest payments are calculated the cost of the sewer project could exceed $1.1 billion.

The Suffolk District Attorney is also seeking to determine whether county Republican leaders exercised improper influence in recommending and obtaining for their associates lucrative contracts for the sewer project.

Will Serve 250,000

When completed in 1978, the sewer project is expected to serve more than 25,000 of Suffolk's 1.26 million residents.

Today, Mr. Linton announced that he would appoint two blue-ribbon committees to examine the design and costs of the project, for which the Federal and state governments are paying 85 percent of the costs and on which $300 million has already been spent.

Nassau Is Ordered By Court to Grant Its Police a Raise

By ROY R. SILVER
Special to The New York Times

MINEOLA, L.I., April 7—A State Supreme Court justice today ordered Nassau County to pay the members of its Patrolmen's Benevolent Association the $3 million it had provided for them in its 1975 budget.

James H. Catterson Jr., the County Attorney, said after a conference with Ralph G. Caso, the County Executive, and other county officials that the county would appeal the ruling to the Appellate Division.

Today's ruling, by Justice Joseph A. Suozzi, required that the county pay a 5 percent salary increase, plus fringe benefits, retroactive to Jan. 1, 1975. It came after a request by the P.B.A. that its 3,500 members receive the 12.3 percent increase—9.5 percent in salary increases and 2.8 percent in fringe benefits—awarded by an arbitration board.

The matter of raises for the police has been in litigation for two years because the county has contended it is unable to pay the increase, which was granted twice by the arbitration panel.

The question of the difference between the 5 percent salary increase budgeted and the 9.5 percent salary increase awarded by the arbitration panel will have to be determined at a hearing before the Appellate Division.

Richard Hartman, the P.B.A. lawyer, said he would submit an order tomorrow to Justice Suozzi to be signed so that the ruling may be implemented.

Mr. Catterson estimated that if the case was taken to the Court of Appeals it might not be resolved until the middle of 1977. Each police officer is entitled to about $750 in back pay for last year based on the 5 percent salary increase. Policemen now earn a base salary of $15,410 after four years.

No-Fee Checking.

It adds up.

Switch your savings and checking accounts to Chemical Bank's Grand Reward and you'll have the satisfaction of watching the money you save add up in a lot of different ways. All you have to do is keep $1,000 in a high interest Chemical savings account and we'll say "yes" to a personal checking account with absolutely no per check or monthly fees, no matter how many checks you write. It's a way of getting more than interest from your savings. And not having to spend an extra penny for your everyday checking. (Of course, other services like stop payments and overdrafts require charges.)

One "Yes" lets you save money on checking instead of spending it.

Many banks charge you fifteen cents a check and seventy-five cents a month, and that adds up. And most banks that offer combination savings-checking plans charge you at least a dollar a month, and that also adds up. But with Chemical's Grand Reward, you have the satisfaction of paying none of these fees for your checking account. And that adds up too. Except our way, it adds up in your favor.

One "Yes" gets you the highest interest we're allowed to pay by law.

And unlike many other banks with combination plans, we'll give you your choice of the savings account that's right for you. You can select either our 5½%, 90-day* ChemSave Gold account or a 5% Regular Savings account. These two accounts, like all Chemical savings accounts, give you the satisfaction of earning the highest possible rate available from a full service bank.

One "Yes" gets you one-stop banking. With more than 250 stops to choose from.

Since you'll have both your savings and checking accounts with one bank, you'll have the satisfaction of handling all your banking in one stop. And your one stop should also be more convenient, because we have more than 250 Chemical offices in and around New York. Plus you'll get one monthly statement that shows both your savings and checking account transactions and balances, so you can see where you stand at a glance.

If you want, you have the option of personalized, prenumbered checks at a nominal cost. And your prenumbered checks are listed on your statement in the order you write them.

Get the Grand Reward. Because when we get the Grand, you get the Reward.

Drop by any branch of Chemical with your savings passbook from your old bank and we'll transfer it for you. And find out how one "yes" from Chemical adds up to a lot more than small change.

Moreland Panel Proposes Reform of Medicaid Rates

By JOHN L. HESS

The Moreland Act Commission on Nursing Homes called yesterday for a halt to the building of new facilities and a reform of Medicaid rates that would narrow the range of costs and eliminate payments for "deluxe service."

It estimated that a moratorium on construction, which would end the 10-year Medicaid building boom, would save $300 million in costs of nursing homes approved but not yet begun. It said that its "efficient-care standards" of payment for operating costs should save at least $40 million to $50 million a year.

Under the rate reform, computers would be used to locate those nursing homes that provide acceptable service at the lowest cost in each category, such as food, laundry and nursing. This cost would then become a standard for setting rates for all nursing homes in a given region and of a given type. The resulting narrowing or rates would bear most heavily on the voluntary, or nonprofit, sector, which is generally conceded to offer the best service and to receive the highest rates, on average.

A spokesman for the voluntary homes said the commission's findings were "grossly inaccurate" and "seem to minimize the human costs."

Practices Criticized

The findings appeared in the fourth and fifth volumes of the commission's final report, which were made public yesterday. Both were sharply critical of prior practices by the state authorities.

The commission found that the huge growth of adult-care facilities over the last decade had been permitted with little specific evidence of need. It said that planning appeared to have been done "on the back of an envelope" and that licenses for future building were in excess of the projected population growth.

It said that the old cost-plus rate system was "sophisticated," but also "quixotic, bureaucratic and costly" and that until recently audits had been "cursory." As a result, it said, rates of proprietary, or profit-making, nursing homes in the state rose 164.8 percent from 1967 to 1975, while those in voluntary homes went up 145.9 percent and the Consumer Price Index went up 64.3 percent.

The commission confirmed in detail the extraordinary range of costs allowed by the state among nursing homes, which it said could not be related to the quality of services. It gave the following examples of daily costs per patient:

	Lowest	Highest
Skilled nursing care	$5.87	$73.34
Dietary service	2.79	11.85
Food materials	1.69	7.15
Administration	1.48	9.47
Laundry and linen	.36	2.19

The commission also reported that the economic division of the State Health Department had found that actual 1974 costs of 26 nursing homes in New York City and six upstate were "fully 10 percentage points lower" than the estimates on which the division had granted them rate increases.

The commission said the average cost of keeping a patient in a nursing home in New York State was $13,500 a year for proprietary homes and $17,700 for voluntary homes. The latter usually provide medical services that are billed separately in proprietary homes, but the commission said that only came to $2.12 a day.

Morris B. Abram, the commission chairman, said that another reason for the cost difference was that the voluntary homes were larger, on average, and it had been found that costs go up with size, beyond about 100 beds. He called this a "diseconomy of scale."

Mitchell M. Waife, executive vice president of the New York Association of Homes for the Aging, representing 140 voluntary facilities, said in a statement that the commission had ignored the differences in care and condition of patients. A patient who would be "bedfast" in a proprietary home might be "ambulatory" in a voluntary one and be spared from being sent to a hospital for acute care, he said.

State health officials reserved detailed comment on the Moreland Commission proposals. They observed that new legislation would not be needed, because the 1975 Legislature had ordered a revision of rates to correspond with levels of care, and the new administration had been working on further changes.

Study Finds That Some Use of Antibiotics May Not Be Justifi

By LAWRENCE K. ALTMAN
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, April 7 — A federally funded study in Pennsylvania hospitals has found that 20 percent of the antibiotic drugs prescribed may not be justified by present scientific evidence, according to results presented here today at a meeting of the American College of Physicians.

This proportion represents the quantity of total antibiotic usage devoted to prophylactic use in surgical patients beyond 48 hours after the operation. The drugs are given to prevent the development of an infection rather than to treat an existing infection.

Because the evidence for the value of such use for more than 48 hours after surgery is limited, the Harvard doctors who did the study urged further research to determine whether the practice was effective or harmful.

Because this is believed to be the first study of its kind, there is no basis for characterizing the 20 percent figure as unusually high or low.

Big Saving Possible

The researchers said that if this practice were curtailed, it could save Americans $200 million a year and prevent an undetermined number of unnecessary deaths and illnesses due to toxic reactions to the drugs. Americans now spend at least a billion dollars a year for antibiotics.

Dr. Edward H. Kass, who headed the study team, said that carefully conducted studies costing just a small fraction of the vast total expenditures on antibiotics could lead to better health care for much less cost, and that public policy should be based on such studies, not just expert opinion.

Charts Are Analyzed

In the study reported today, the charts of 5,300 patients in 20 acute care hospitals across Pennsylvania were randomly selected. It was perhaps the largest regional survey of antibiotic usage in the everyday medical and surgical practice in community hospitals. Most other studies of antibiotic usage have been among selected hospitals and teaching hospitals, which may not reflect the pattern elsewhere.

The study was undertaken two years ago under an agreement between the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and the American College of Physicians as contractors for a broad base of medical and surgical specialty organizations.

Dr. Kass, an expert on infectious diseases and epidemiology at Harvard, headed the team that reported the findings. They included Dr. Mervyn Shapiro and Dr. Timouthy R. Townsend of the Boston City Hospital and Karal M. Weigel of the Commission of Professional and Hospital Activities in Ann Arbor, Mich.

Dr. Kass emphasized in an interview the preliminary nature of the data presented today and that had taken 15 months for a fulltime staff to develop. He said that it would take many more months to analyze the data further to answer myriad questions that bear on the issue of proper usage of antibiotics in the practice of American medicine.

Wide Disagreement

Among the key questions that the researchers hope to answer are: How often do adverse reactions result from antibiotic usage; how many adverse drug reactions occur among patients who do not need the drug at all or could not have benefited from the antibiotic prescribed, and did the patient receive the proper dosage by the correct route of administration of the right antibiotic for the right bacteria?

At first, Dr. Kass said, the team tried to answer such questions and to develop controls and standards based on the opinion of experts in infectious disease and anitbiotic therapy. But this approach proved "of little value," because there were so many areas of disagreement and so few of agreement about antibiotic therapy, he said.

Instead, the team designed a study to see how much drugs were used in current practice. Pennsylvania was chosen, because the American College of Physicians has its headquarters here.

The team randomly selected 20 hospitals, a 10 percent sample of the 194 acute-care nongovernmental general hospitals listed in the American Hospital Association guide.

The researchers said that they were surprised to find that records were so well kept that they could retrieve 99 percent of the 5,300 charts of patients who died or were discharged on 10 randomly selected days evenly spaced throughout the fiscal year 1974.

About 30 percent of all patients surveyed received antibiotics, but the figure varied widely depending on the type of hospital care needed. The figure ranged from 13 percent for obstetrical patients to 61 percent for urology patients. The percentage also increased with the age of the patient.

Over all, Dr. Kass said, many aspects of performance were "remarkably good." He cited as evidence the fact that, for 57 percent of the patients, cultures were taken before antibiotics were prescribed. This was much higher than expected.

Though the ideal percentage was not known, he said that the 57 percent figure was deceptively low because cultures would have been considered unnecessary for the overwhelming majority of patients receiving prophylactic antibiotics.

Further, he said that less than 2 percent of patients had received the most toxic and costly antibiotics, which "was not suggestive of gross misuse."

However, he said, problem areas existed, the most important being prolonged prophylactic use of antibiotics after surgery.

"We know of no data anywhere in the surgical literature that suggests that prolongation of prophylactic use of anti[biotics] beyond 48 hours has value," Dr. Kass said. Dep[ending] on results of further[studies], he said, reduction of [unnecessary] prescriptions could save [a] cent of antibiotic use and

Data from this and proposed studies could [help] identify the few doctors [whose] antibiotic prescription[s] are unusually poor, Dr. [Kass] said. He said that one [doctor] had prescribed four [grams of] tetracycline for the same [patient] when one form would have sufficed. Another [doctor] received 12 antibiotics in [a day]. Dr. Kass said was an appa[rent] gross excess.

The organizations [involved] in the study included the [Infec]tious Diseases Society of [America], the American Academy [of] Pediatrics, the American [Col]lege of Surgeons, the American Academy of Family [Physicians], the Center for Disease Control, the American Medical Association and the Bureau of [Medical] Assurance.

A spokesman for the pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association said that officials of the trade association had had time to analyze the data, but said that it bore on the prescribing practices of doctors than on the inherent toxicity of the drugs.

F.A.A. Weighs Plan to Finance Quieter Jets With a Ticket Tax

By RICHARD WITKIN

An airline industry proposal for reducing aircraft noise and simultaneously helping to revive sagging airliner production is being seriously considered by the Ford Administration.

Key Congressional committees were notified of the Administration posture yesterday in a letter from the Secretary of Transportation, William T. Coleman Jr.

Mr. Coleman said the plan, which calls for a new ticket-tax fund to aid in financing replacement of older, noiser planes, had prompted him to delay a promised decision on the festering issue of aircraft noise.

He had promised Congress a decision by this weekend on a recommendation by the Federal Aviation Administration for new rules that would meet the noise problem primarily by modification of hundreds of airliners now in service.

Now, Mr. Coleman said, he had asked the F.A.A. to give urgent study to the alternative industry proposal, which shifts the emphasis to replacement of the older, noisier craft. He promised that his decision on what he thought should be done would be made no later than June 1.

Mr. Coleman was briefed on the new proposal last Friday by officials of the Air Transport Association, the industry organization of this country's scheduled airlines. The original plan was put together by leaders of several of the carriers. But it is still being refined by the transport association, and not all the members have given their approval.

As it stands now, the project would not require any extra outlay by passengers. The current 8 percent ticket tax, which goes into a trust fund for development of airports and airways, would be cut to 6 percent, at least. A 2 percent surcharge would then be imposed on each ticket for the new antinoise "escrow" fund.

The money in the fund could then be used to guarantee loans from private lenders to finance airline purchase of quiet new planes. Estimates are that a total of $2 billion might thus be accrued over the next 10 years, and that this would generate about three times that amount in loans from insurance companies and other lenders.

According to Mr. Coleman's deputy, John W. Barnum, it is not yet clear whether the airlines would use the funds chiefly for the newest and quietest of their existing planes, such as the jumbo jets, or for new designs that would be still quieter and give better fuel economy.

The airlines have been fighting a long rearguard action against any requirement that noise criteria be met by modifying the worst current offenders with noise-suppression kits.

The airlines' objections have been that the noise reduction would be very modest, not justifying the cost, and there would be further delays in retiring obsolescent planes.

About three-fourths of the airliners now in service are operating under exemptions from Federal noise criteria because they were manufactured before the environmental movement succeeded in getting the new criteria into legislation.

The worst offenders are the older 707's and DC-8's, many of which are 15 years old or older.

Revenue-Sharing Change Urged To Gain True Regional Planning

By MICHAEL STERNE

A plan to use Federal revenue-sharing funds as a goad to get suburbs to cooperate in regional plans that would help New York and other big cities was proposed yesterday by Herbert Bienstock, regional commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"So long as revenue-sharing money goes from the Federal Government directly to Larchmont and Teaneck and Great Neck, they will have no motive for sharing the burdens of the city," Mr. Bienstock said.

"But if the Federal funds were funneled through regional organizations, and if they made cooperation a condition of sharing in those funds, this might speed the process of regionalization."

Mr. Bienstock spoke before 100 economists, businessmen and labor leaders at the annual institute of the New York City Council on Economic Education, whose theme was "New York: The City on Trial."

The all-day session, held at Pace University, was also addressed by Brenton W. Harries, president of Standard & Poor's Corporation; Victor Gotbaum, executive director of District Council 37 of the State, County and Municipal Employees, and Howard J. Samuels, former head of the Offtrack Betting Corporation and now a business consultant.

Keys to Success

Assessing the prospects for New York's ability to solve its fiscal problems, all three agreed that the three-year plan aimed at restoring the city's budget to balance would fail unless the Federal Government helped by assuming welfare and other costs and by permitting the city a further delay in paying its debt obligations.

Mr. Harries cited continuing inflation and rising social welfare costs that the city cannot control, Mr. Gotbaum the failure of the plan to include any provision for wage raises during the three years it is to run and Mr. Samuels the huge burden of debt service that is taking funds needed for services and making the city less and less attractive for business.

Mr. Bienstock, who said he was speaking for himself and not in his official capacity, made his proposal as he summarized economic trends that had weakened the city's ability to sustain local government.

Pointing to a 28.8 percent increase in the number of New York jobs held by commuters from 1960 to 1970 and the concentration of those jobs in the highly paid managerial, professional and technical fields, he said some way had to be found to make this "urban-suburban linkage" work to help support services needed by the city and the suburbs.

'A Disastrous Year'

Mr. Bienstock also said 1975 had been "a disastrous year" for the city's economy and noted that the number of jobs here had fallen by 168,700, a loss larger than had been sustained in the three previous years combined.

Updating a previous study that had shown that from 1969 to 1974, a total of 138 of the city's most important occupations had declined and only 24 had grown, he said that in 1975 the number of growth occupations had shrunk further, to only 10. Two of the 10—state government employment and employment in health services, which is largely dependent on government support—are expected to slip into the declining category this year as state budget cuts take effect.

Mr. Kone said Mr. Siegel would assume the $38,298-a-year job later this month.

Burger Urges New Ways to Resolve Court Disputes

By LESLEY OELSNER
Special to The New York Times

ST. PAUL, April 7—Chief Justice Warren E. Burger called today for the creation of new ways to resolve many of the disputes that are now disposed of in the courts through lawsuits—including medical malpractice and other personal injury cases, child custody fights, many environmental cases and claims involving small amounts of money.

The Chief Justice issued his plea for reform in a speech at the opening here this afternoon of a national conference of lawyers and judges. He offered few specifics on possible alternatives.

The thrust of his speech, though, appeared to be that many familiar types of lawsuits should be taken out of the courts.

He said, for example, that "arbitration should have wider use.""

Discussing small claims, he described—"to illustrate, rather than propose," he said—a system in which a tribunal of either "three representative citizens" or two nonlawers and one lawyer or law-trained citizen, would be given "final and unreviewable authority" to decide cases.

A Question Is Raised

"It is time," he said, to "ask ourselves whether the tools of procedure, the methods of judicial process that developed slowly through the evolution of the common law and fitted to rural, agrarian society, are entirely suited, without change, to the complex modern society of the late 20th century and what will we will have to meet in the 21st century."

Justice Burger's proposals come at a time when civil libertarian and public interest groups are voicing increasing concern over the trend, caused by a series of recent Supreme Court decisions, toward limiting and cutting off access to the Federal courts, in particular for citizens who charge violations of their constitutional or statutory rights.

A letter decrying that trend was drafted yesterday by 10 officials of nine legal and public interest groups, headed by Aryeh Neier and Melvin H. Wulf, the executive director and the legal director of the American Civil Liberties Union, and sent to the conference here today. The letter asked the conference to discuss the problem.

An official of the American Bar Association, which is cosponsoring the conference, said that copies of th eletter would probably be distributed tomorrow morning.

Chief Justice Burger said in his speech "The topic selected for this conference may raise in some minds the idea that our objective is to reduce access to the courts."

"Of course, that is not the objective," he said, "for what we seek is the most satisfactory, the speediest and the least expensive means of meeting the legitimate needs of people in resolving their disputes."

His next sentences, though, showed that if reducing access to the courts was not the objective, it could well be a result.

"We must therefore open our minds to consideration of means and forums that have never been tried before,' he said. "Even if what we have now has been tolerable for the first three-quarters of this century, there are grave questions whether it will do for the final quarter and even graver questions if that will do for the next century."

Chief Justice Burger listed nine areas in which, he said, "we must probe for fundamental changes and major overhaul rather than simply 'tinkering'."

They were small claims, arbitration, legal costs related to home purchasing and financing, probate procedures, cases in which public or private projects are delayed pending challenge in the courts on environmental grounds, medical malpractice cases, other personal injury cases, "such family problems as marriage, child custody and adoptions," and procedural rules used in civil cases.

In some of these areas, he appeared to be suggesting merely a streamlining of existing procedures. He suggested, for instance, that modern computer technology be used for land title searches, so as to reduce the current costs. He said that probate procedures could be simplified.

Regarding rules of civil procedure, he said that he would request the Committee on Rules of the Judicial Conference, the Federal judiciary's administrative leadership, to conduct hearings onn on any proposals that the legal profession considered appropriate.

In other areas, however, he called for entirely new procedures.

Of small claims, he said:

"With few exceptions, it is no longer economically feasible to employ lawyers and conventional litigation processes for many 'minor' or small claims, and what is 'minor' is a subjective and variable factor.

"This means that there are few truly effective remedies for usury, for shoddy merchandise, shoddy services on a TV, a washing machine, a refrigerator, or a poor roofing job on a home. This also means lawyers must re-examine what constitutes practice of law, for if lawyers refuse minor cases on economic grounds, they ought not [to] insist that only lawyers may deal with such cases."

About medical malpractice and personal injuries he said:

"New ways must be found to provide reasonable compensation for injuries resulting from the negligence of hospitals and doctors, without the gross distortion in the cost of medical and hospital care that we have witnessed in the past few years."

As for other personal injury cases, the Chief Justice suggested the workmen's compensation system as a possible model, saying, "New ways must be found to compensate people for injuries from negligence of others without having the process take years to complete and consume up to half the damages awarded."

Regarding family matters, he said, "We must see whether it is feasible to have relationships of such intimacy and sensitivity dealt with outside the formality and potentially traumatic atmosphere of courts."

The Chief Justice also stressed the need for carefully studying the effects of the Bail Reform Act of 1966, which sets standards for judges in setting bail for criminal defendants. He said that the act was related to the phenomenon of people who were free on bail pending trial on one charge while committing additional crimes. He added, though, "We cannot be sure of the answers, because we do not know all the facts."

The meeting here is entitled "The National Conference on the Causes of Popular Dissatisfaction with the Administration of Justice," after the title of a speech given here in 1906 by Roscoe Pound, the legal scholar and dean of the Harvard Law School from 1916 to 1936. Mr. Pound's speech described flaws of the legal system at that time and called for various reforms, some of which were made.

"This is not the first time that the executive branch has tried to tie our hands by promising new, more reliable cost estimates," said Senator Herman E. Talmadge, Democrat of Georgia, chairman of the Agriculture Committee. He is a co-sponsor of the substitute bill.

"The Senate will not fall into the trap of waiting for new cost estimates before we act," he said. "This is the Senate, not the New York Stock Exchange with a ticker tape of new quotations."

When debate resumes tomorrow, the Senate will vote on a waiver of the Budget Control and Impoundment Act that will allow the chamber to pass a food stamp bill with new spending levels, before the House and Senate Budget Committees approve a final spending limit for the 1977 fiscal year.

Senator Allen said that h... ...was opposed to such "budget busting."

Before you buy speakers, do some Acoustic Research.

Free Seminar at Harvey Sound, this Thursday and Friday, April 8th and 9th, from 10AM—5PM.

About 20 years ago, the Acoustic Research Company introduced the acoustic suspension principle for home use. AR produced a speaker, the AR-3, that was considered state-of-the-art. Today, the current version, the AR-3a, is still one of the best speakers you can buy.

AR has done a lot of research since then, and an AR engineer is coming to Harvey Sound to share this knowledge with you this Thursday and Friday, April 8th and 9th, from 10AM-5PM.

You'll learn about the parameters of tweeter and mid-range design, and about the all-important factor of room placement on reproduced sound. Use this occasion to ask any and all questions you may have.

You'll be introduced to AR's significant new π Series from AR's Advanced Development Division. Harvey Sound Professionals believe that these speakers represent a new standard of accuracy for AR, and deliver sound with an unprecedented degree of placement flexibility.

You wouldn't expect any less from AR. They're professionals.

Scientists Are Taking More Serious View of Loch Ness Monster

computer processing and analysis, show a "flipper-like object." They are not, however, convinced that a 1975 photographs shows a plump body and small head, linked by an elongated neck, as the search team believed. Since part of the hypothitical neck does not appear, they suggest that two objects are involved. These, they add, may have been swarms of phantom midge larvae whose air sacs could have produced the images.

Extraordinary Size

Nevertheless, authors of the report on the search in the March-April issue of Technology Review argue that sonar echoes from the rapidly moving object or objects, which seemingly show in some photographs, are those of a creature 10 to 50 times larger than fish observed with the same photographic system. The sonars used were of the side-scan type widely employed in searching for sunken ships and in offshore oil-drilling operations. One model was produced by Raytheon and another by Klein Associates whose president, Martin Klein, an M.I.T. alumnus, was a co-author of the report. The sonar echoes were interpreted by several outside specialists.

Another co-author was Dr. Harold E. Edgerton, a pioneer in underwater photography and the use of strobe light flashes for high-speed photographs. He is an emeritus professor at M.I.T.

Dr. Edgerton's camera systems were used in the project In the 1975 search, the camera were designed to begin operation only when sonar indicated a target at least 4 feet wide came within 40 feet.

Color Pictures

The camera then began taking pictures every 15 seconds. This system, set on the lake bottom, was blinded when silt was thrown onto it.

"We know the silt was stirred up by an animal," says the report, "because divers confirmed that the camera was clean after it was put on the bottom."

Dr. Edgerton's camera and strobe system in the 1972 search was suspended from a boat as backup to one on the lake bottom, and it was this system that obtained color photographs presented as the 1975 evidence.

Probably the chief impediment to determining the nature of what was observed is the murkiness of the water, caused by suspended peat particles. The maximum photographic range of the system used in 1972 was about 10 feet. This was increased to 30 feet in 1975, but pictures taken at that distance were so dark they had to be processed by computer to bring any images into prominence.

Such a method was used by the Jet Propulsion Laboratory of the California Institute of Technology to enhance faint images in pictures transmitted from near Mars by Mariner spacecraft.

The Loch Ness photographs were processed by Alan Gillespie of that laboratory. He reports in Technology Review that "one animal may have had a 16 foot body."

The most impressive photograph of the "Loch Ness Monster," taken in 1933 by a surgeon, shows a tall, arched neck supporting a small head above a largely submerged body. The article in Technology Review says there is no evidence of tampering with the photograph.

In assessing what sort of creature might inhabit the lake, Dr. Roy P. Mackal, formerly an associate professor of biochemistry at the University of Chicago, describes as a "likely candidate" the pleisosaur, a prehistoric suborder of reptiles that roamed the seas 100 million years ago. They were long-necked, ate fish and sometimes ventured into estuaries.

Dr. Mackal was a director of the Loch Ness Investigation Bureau, which was active until 1972. In an excerpt from his new book, "The Monsters of Loch Ness, published in Technology Review, he argues that millions of salmon pass through the loch to spawn up-river or to get to the sea as juveniles, providing ample food for large carnivores.

Dr. Zug believes the "monsters" are fish. His reasoning is that they are rarely seen on the surface, whereas an air-breathing animal, such as a reptile, would probably have to surface regularly.

Yesterday at the Biltmore Hotel here Robert H. Rines, dean at the Franklin Pierce Law Center in Concord, N.H., and head of the Academy of Applied Science, which is conducting the search, and others described plans for a more ambitious effort next summer.

They hope improved photographic and sonar systems will finally reveal the true nature of the creature, widely known as "Nessie."

The Academy of Applied Science was formed in 1963 to support "unusual areas of research." The fact that it was little known contributed to the suspicion with which early reports of the Loch Ness project were received. Its advisory board of governors, however, includes a number of prominent M.I.T. professors.

Those familiar with the evidence, but not involved in the search, when reached yesterday seemed convinced that a large animal probably inhabits the loch, but were not sure whether it is of a type unknown to science.

This underwater photo, purporting to show the head of a living creature in Loch Ness, was the model for the drawing on Page 1, which was sketched to aid the reader.

Photo above, made at a depth of 35 feet in Loch Ness on June 20, 1975, is simplified by the artist's sketch below. Head and neck are estimated to measure between 7 and 12 feet. Object was 20 to 25 feet from the camera.

Pesticide Is Linked to Animal Cancer

By HAROLD M. SCHMECK Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 7—As part of a program to alert the public to cancer hazards in the environment, the National Cancer Institute released today a report linking the pesticide Kepone to liver cancer in animals.

The pesticide has received considerable publicity in the last year because of pollution problems from a plant that had been producing it in Hopewell, Va., and because of illnesses among the plant's workers. The plant was closed last July.

In August, the Environmental Protection Agency ordered the manufacturer to stop sales and use of the compound and prohibited further manufacture.

Tests done for the institute showed that many rats and mice, fed Kepone for 80 weeks as part of their diet, developed cancer of the liver.

In a summary of the test results, the cancer institute said that more than 80 percent of male mice that were fed the compound during the long-term test had developed liver cancer. More than 40 percent of female mice developed the disease.

In comparable studies of rats, 7 percent of males in one group developed liver cancer as did 22 percent of the females. No liver cancers developed in rats of either sex that were not fed the compound.

Liver Lesions

"Test results clearly suggest liver lesions, including cancer, were induced in both sexes of rats and mice fed chlordecone under the conditions of this test," a statement by the institute concluded.

Chlordecone is the common chemical name of Kepone, which was originally developed by the Allied Chemical Corporation and manufactured, until last summer, by its subcontractor, the Science Products Company of Hopewell, Va., which is now insolvent.

In its conclusion, the statement said it was not possible to extrapolate the results of the animal experiments to humans but that the tests served as a warning of the compound's possible cancer-causing potential in humans.

The tests were part of a major program in which the National Cancer Institute is testing about 500 compounds for cancer-causing potential. The compounds include industrial chemicals, pesticides, food additives and some naturally occurring substances. The purpose is to identify cancer-causing chemicals in the environment.

Kepone was selected for the tests, the institute said, because it is chemically related to other suspected cancer-causing chemicals and because of its presence in the human environment.

The illnesses reported to date in the plant employees in Virginia included tremors, blurred vision and loss of memory, but not liver cancer.

In answer to a query today, a spokesman for the E.P.A. said that the ban on manufacture and sales applied only to the single known producer, the plant in Hopewell, but that the agency was taking steps to prevent use of the pesticide in products generally.

It has been estimated that it is used in 40 household products to control ants, roaches, and some other pests. More than 90 percent of production has been for export.

House Labor Unit Opposes Curb on Rehiring Funds

WASHINGTON, April 7 (AP)—The House Education and Labor Committee rejected yesterday a move to restrict cities in using Federal employment training funds to rehire laidoff municipal workers.

Democrats outvoted Republicans 21 to 6 to put the committee on record against a Labor Department directive of last week that cities can use no more than 10 percent of the job slots under the Comprehensive Employment Training Act to rehire city workers.

Detroit is a principal target of the Labor Department mandate. With revenues down, the city has filled 49 percent of its 3,700 positions with city employees rehired after earlier layoffs.

"We think that C.E.T.A. funds can be used to rehire people who have been the victims of a bona fide layoff," said Representative James G. O'Hara, Democrat of Mich.

Black Injured at Boston Rally Plans Action Against Officials

By JOHN KIFNER
Special to The New York Times

BOSTON, April 7 — "I was just out there walking to City Hall in my three-piece suit," Theodore Landsmark was saying. "I was anyone."

His face is swathed in tape now, protecting the nose that was broken with the staff of an American flag swung by one of a crowd of white youths who attacked him Monday on the broad brick plaza outside the city's downtown Government Center area.

"Nigger! There's a nigger!" the crowd shouted as Mr. Landsmark went down amid punches, kicks and the wielding of the flag like a spear. "Kill him!"

The attack on the 29-year-old Yale-educated black lawyer who happened onto the edge of an antibusing demonstration has stirred reaction here and across the country and has once again focused attention on this city's racial tensions.

Today, Mr. Landsmark told a news conference that he planned to take legal action against elected public officials on the City Council and school committee who he and other blacks charge are fostering racial hatred over court-ordered busing for school desegregation "for their own selfish ends."

One potential target of such a suit is City Councillor Louise Day Hicks, a leader of the anti-busing movement. She had invited the several hundred white youths, who had walked out of South Boston and Charlestown High School in protest, into City Hall to read their list of demands.

The police have arrested a 16-year-old white South Boston youth in connection with the beating of Mr. Landsmark and are seeking other suspects.

Blacks here say that they fear to go into several of the city's neighborhoods because of attacks by whites. Homes of blacks living in largely white neighborhoods in the East Boston, Dorchester and Hyde Park sections have been stoned and firebombed by white youths, and there have been a number of beatings by whites of blacks working or traveling through sections of South Boston and Dorchester.

As has been the pattern here, Monday's beating caused ripples of other racial incidents throughout the city. Yesterday, white students in South Boston's Gavin Middle School walked out and threw stones at buses and cars. Last night, black youths from a Roxbury housing project stoned firemen and white motorists, injuring several, and school buses were stoned in the black neighborhoods today.

Members of the Legislature's black caucus held a rally in front of City Hall yesterday to call for Federal and state investigations of the roles of City Council and School Committee members they charge were "inciting young people to mob violence" and asking that Federal funds be withheld from Boston until city officials can guarantee equal access to public facilities. Later, after emotional debate, the State Legislature passed a resolution condemning the beating of Mr. Landsmark.

Jackson Won in New York By Narrowly Based Voting

Did Best in Queens and Brooklyn and With Jews and Moderates—Crangle Hails 'Draft Humphrey' Success

By MAURICE CARROLL

Henry M. Jackson's capture of 104 of the New York delegates to the Democratic National convention, a comfortable 38 percent that lost luster primarily because of his own pre-election predictions of a "landslide," was built on a narrow geographical and ethnic base, post-election studies showed yesterday.

The Washington Senator won where he had been expected to, in the regular organization territory in Queens and Brooklyn, and among the people he had been expected to. Jewish voters and those who see themselves as moderates and conservatives, according to a reading of polls and the political map.

As final delegate votes were tallied yesterday, the following elements appeared:

¶Apportioning the at-large delegates who will be named in the same ratio as the district winners, Mr. Jackson will have 104; Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona, 70; Jimmy Carter, former Georgia Governor, 35, and 65 will be uncommitted. Of the last group, 16 say they are committed to Senator Hubert H. Humphrey.

¶Ten of the officially uncommitted. Of the last group, 16 Albany area and four in the South Bronx, can be counted for now as Jackson supporters, according to their leaders.

¶The big local winners, although their names did not appear on the ballot, were Mr. Humphrey's local sponsor, Joseph F. Crangle, the Erie County leader, and Mr. Jackson's state manager, Donald R. Manes of Queens.

¶Several New York politicians with ambitions for advancement built their prestige by leading victorious slates. These included three potential candidates for United States Senator—Daniel P. Moynihan, former United States representative to the United Nations, and Representatives Bella S. Abzug and Mario Biaggi.

¶A handful of officials with well-known names were able to break the general pattern of slate voting and win personal victories. This group included Representatives Otis G. Pike, Herman Badillo and Jonathan B. Bingham, State Senator Karen S. Burstein and Assemblyman Maurice Hinchey, Jr.

¶There were some "name" loser — including Councilman Robert F. Wagner Jr.; former Representative Allard K. Lowenstein; Victor Gotbaum, the union leader; Jimmy Breslin, the writer; Mayor Thomas P. Ryan of Rochester; Mayor Lee Alexander of Syracuse; Assemblymen Seymour Posner, Alan Mochberg and G. Oliver Koppell; former Assemblyman Antonio G. Olivieri; Frances Bennick, the new leader of the New Democratic Coalition; Ernest C. Odierna, the anti-organization leader in the Bronx, and Councilman Louis R. Gigante.

"I called Senator Humphrey this morning," a cheerful Mr. Crangle said in his Buffalo office as he surveyed results that showed all 16 of his "help draft Humphrey" delegates as winners. "And he said he was very pleased and gratified and wanted to convey his appreciation to the people up here."

Mr. Crangle said that the belated change in the state election law to list Presidential candidates next to the names of their delegate supporters, which had been thought likely to harm the officially uncommitted, had, in an odd twist, helped his Humphrey slates.

"With the names on, people didn't make the mistake of voting for the pledged slates," he said.

Mr. Manes, who had expressed pain at Mr. Jackson's "landslide" assertions throughout the campaign, said that the outcome had been "right on the nose" as he had foreseen it. "It was a statement he stuck to when he shouldn't have," Mr. Manes said.

Pennsylvania Next

He said that busloads of workers who had helped the Jackson slates sweep Queens would be sent to Pennsylvania, which votes April 27 and is the next make-or-break test for the Jackson candidacy.

Jackson territory virtually ended at the city line. His delegates swept Queens and Staten Island, dominated Brooklyn and did well in the Bronx and, except for the 26th Congressional District in Rockland and Orange Counties, did not win another spot. Representative Samuel S. Stratton, who headed the uncommitted slate in the 28th district, in the Albany area, had said that "we could be counted as Jackson delegates."

The Jackson voter, according to a survey by The New York Times and CBS News of 1,074 Democratic voters in 20 New York precincts, thought of himself as a moderate or conservative more than those who said they had voted for Mr. Udall or Mr. Carter. He was more likely to be Jewish, to be in the 45-to-64-year-old bracket.

Delegates pledged to Mr. Udall ran best in the suburbs and in Manhattan. The Times/CBS News poll indicaed that the Udall voter was most likely to describe himself as a liberal, was predominantly in the professional-managerial class, was more likely to be a college graduate.

Mr. Carter scored only in the sprawling 30th District in the North Country and in the districts around Rochester, where his upstate coordinator, Margaret Costanza, the Deputy Mayor of Rochester, scored a big personal victory by trouncing a slate heded by her political enemy, Mayor Ryan.

The Carter voter was harder to fix, according to the Times/CBS News poll. Likely to describe himself as a moderate, he was a bit more likely than the Jackson or Udall voters to be blue-collar and a Catholic, a bit less likely to be a college graduate.

The over-all New York Democrat was distinguished by staying home, according to an informal district-by-district check. It appeared that no more than 20 percent of the 3,518,681 enrolled Democrats voted, about a normal turnout.

While the Democrats, if numerically skimpy were at least having a fight, New York Repubicans ran a race of little interest, adding 114 uncommitted district delegates to the 37 at-large already picked by the party leadership and all, presumably, available to do the bidding of Vice President Rockefeller. A scattering of insurgents ran pledged to Ronald Reagan but without the support of the former California Governor, and three of them won in Queens.

"We kept the factions out of New York," was the way the state chairman, Richard Rosenbaum, described the Republican result at a news conference yesterday in Albany.

The Democratic pattern produced a local wrinkle here and there of some interest.

In the 12th District in Brooklyn, which Shirley Chisholm represents in Congress, her rival, Councilman Samuel D. Wright, supported Mr. Carter and won two of the four district seats. Mrs. Chisholm had committed a bit of prestige to the Udall slate, which won one spot.

In the 21st District in the South Bronx, Mr. Badillo was elected as a delegate but Mr. Velez's team won the four other spots. The one who dropped off the bottom when Mr. Badillo won was Councilman Gigante, A Roman, Catholic priest who had been a bitter political rival of Mr. Velez until a recent rapproachment of sorts. Mr. Velez did not seem overly dejected by either the Badillo victory or the Gigante loss. He might run for Congress against Mr. Badillo.

In the 33d District in Syracuse, Mayor Alexander, a Jackson supporter, lost to an uncommitted organization slate supported by the Onandega County leader, Thomas Lowery. The Alexander-Lowery relationship, while not at present one of constant warfare, is no more than correct.

Manhattan, whose undisciplined factionalized Democrats customarily produce more than their fair share of political ups and downs, did it again. In the 17th District that shares the tip of the island with Staten Island, a Jackson slate headed by Representative John M. Murphy easily defeated a Udall slate including Mr. Wagner and Mr. Gotham.

In the 20th, along the island's western edge, perhaps the most liberal in the nation, Mrs. Abzug's Udall slate included two "name" politicians, Manfred Ohrenstein, minority leader of the state Senate, and David N. Dinkins, the Manhattan county clerk, and Jean O'Leary, a lesbian former nun who is active in feminist and homosexual rights groups.

In the 18th, in Greenwich Village and the East Side, the prominent losers included Mr. Olivieri, who was state political coordinator for the hapless New York Presidential campaign of former Senator Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma, and the two men who ran Mr. Carter's downstate campaign, William vanden Heuvel and Bartle Bull.

In Divided New York Delegation, a Further Split

demonstrated their political acumen by attracting the national convention to New York when the city was in the throes of a fiscal crisis. As in sports, the host usually has a political advantage.

The two Democrats had even pushed through legislation changing the Presidential primary date to early spring thus separating it from the other primaries for public office. By so doing, it was hoped, there would be a low, Democratic-organization turnout at a time when the Presidential race would be wide open and an uncommitted delegation might be more electable.

It did not work that way. "The Governor's whole strategy fell apart; he'll have a bloc of people but not as much as he intended," said Arnold Weiss, the former chairman of the liberal New Democratic Coalition. He was echoed by several Carey friends who declined to be identified.

They noted that most of the uncommitted delegates would be loyal to the Governor as would many Jackson delegates if the Senator fell by the wayside before the convention.

The Udall and Carter delegates representing 38 percent of the delegation, many with no ties to the Democratice organization, would be more difficult to corral.

"It's still possible to get together after a first ballot on a New York basis," said a longtime Carey friend, adding, "It will depend upon the Governor's political prestige at that time whether he can put together the delegation to bargain for New York."

In contrast, another new Democratic Governor, Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California, is apparently popular enough in his home state so that he is running as a "native son" Presidential hopeful in the California primary, thus tying up most of his delegation, the largest at the convention.

Governor Carey, in the meantime, not only has a popularity problem because of the state's fiscal crisis but also a political problem because he in effect has no state chairman to serve as his advance man, persuader and enforcer with the New York delegation.

He has severed his ties with Mr. Cunningham until the state chairman is free of corruption allegations by the special state prosecutor, Maurice H Nadjari. As a result, the state party and the delegation are leaderless.

This leadership vacuum was one reason why Democratic county leaders across the state felt free to go their own ways as uncommitted or as supporters of Mr. Jackson and Mr. Humphrey. Mr. Humphrey, for example, has a strong ally in the state in Joseph F. Crangle, the Erie County Democratic leader who was ousted by the Governor as state chairman to make way for Mr. Cunningham. Mr. Crangle led unauthorized Humphrey slates to victory in three Buffalo-area districts. Mr. Crangle noted yesterday that his "first loyalty is to the people who elected you when you told them you were supporting Humphrey."

Mr. Jackson has a strong ally in another influential county leader, Donald R. Manes, the Queens Borough President and Democratic chairman. Mr. Manes, who is state chairman of the Jackson campaign, led a clean sweep of Queens for the Senator even if he did not do as well as he expected in other areas of the state.

Such diverse influences hardly make for a united delegation.

Some Ground for Hope

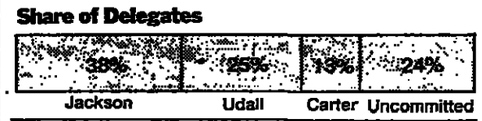
However, all is not lost for Mr. Carey and Democratic organization leaders who hope to play an influential role at the convention for the first time in many years.

Four years ago, the Democratic leaders were lucky they could get in the convention hall after Senator George McGovern, supported by anti-organization Democrats and political amateurs, swept the New York primary by winning 230 of the 248 district delegates on the basis of his strong anti-war stance. Four years before that, another maverick, Senator Eugene J. McCarthy, won half the New York delegation.

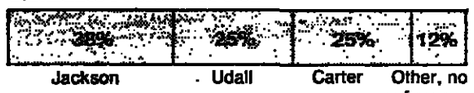
At least this time, Governor Carey and other Democratic leaders will recognize their fellow delegates even if they have some difficulty leading them.

New York Delegate Count vs. Candidate Preference Poll*

Share of Delegates



Candidate Preference Poll*



* Based on a New York Times/CBS News Survey of 1,074 democratic voters

The New York Times/April 8, 1976

Despite the fact that New York Democrats could not vote directly for Presidential candidates, the voters interviewed in the Times/CBS News poll were asked whom they preferred for the Democratic nomination for President. The top bar shows the share of delegates obtained by the three candidates and the uncommitted slates. The bottom bar shows the proportion of voters who directly supported each candidate in the survey. The poll indicates that Jimmy Carter may have had more direct support than his delegate count showed, in part because delegates pledged to him were on the ballot in fewer districts than his main rivals.

Jackson, Carter and Udall Focusing on Pennsylvania

cent of the vote, and his failure to produce the landslide he had exuberantly forecast in New York.

Although he failed to win a single delegate in Wisconsin and took only three of 117 in New York, former Gov. Ronald Reagan of California said he had done far better than expected in the Republican portion of yesterday's balloting.

President Ford said his 55 percent in Wisconsin constituted an endorsement of the foreign policy of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, as both camps looked toward what they consider the Republican showdown—the Texas primary on May 1.

After the first six weeks of the primary season, the noncandidacy of Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota appeared healthy. With none of the three leading active competitors able to break into a last-ing lead, the possibility of a deadlock was on the lips of political Washington yesterday.

Mr. Humphrey is counting on such a deadlock to open the way for him. The latent sentiment in his favor was shown in two ways on Tuesday: In the election of 16 pro-Humphrey delegates in the Buffalo area, and in the findings of polls conducted by The New York Times and CBS News showing that the Senator would have won both primaries had he been on the ballots.

Maintaining his cool posture, Mr. Humphrey said in Washington that "Mo Udall should feel greatly encouraged" and that Senator Jackson "got another good boost." He omitted any mention of Mr. Carter, with whom he is reportedly displeased.

"The question now is whether anyone goes to the convention with 1,100 votes or so," the Minnesotan commented. "As of now, that's pretty unlikely."

Senator Frank Church of Idaho, whose first test will come in Nebraska on May 11, read the returns and commented in Providence, R. I., that no Democrat "has developed the kind of momentum that will win the number of delegates needed for a first-ballot nomination."

With 1,505 delegates needed to nominate, Mr. Carter leads with 241, Mr. Jackson is second with 177, Mr. Udall third with 119, Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama, who lost his fifth straight primary in Wisconsin, stands fourth with 104.

On the Republican side, where 1,130 delegates constitute a majority, Mr. Ford has 251 and Governor Reagan, 84.

Mr. Carter provided most of the drama on Tuesday night by coming from 16,000 votes behind to win in Wisconsin. The manner of his victory gave him a psychological edge, but he was unable, as he had hoped, to force Mr. Udall out of the race.

"I'm No. 1," he told supporters in Milwaukee.

But within hours, he was in Pittsburgh at a convention of the state labor federation, where he was given a preview of the difficulties he faces in Pennsylvania. Delegates shouted, "We Want Humphrey," and "No peanuts in Pennsylvania." Mr. Carter grows seed peanuts on his farm at Plains, Ga.

As for Mr. Udall, he made the obligatory comments in Detroit about having "stopped the Carter landslide," but his disappointment was reflected in a wry comment to reporters in Milwaukee early yesterday.

"I would ask you," he said, "to amend my statements last night and insert the word 'lose' where I had the word 'win.'"

Still No Victory

The critical question for the Arizonan is how long he can continue without a victory. He has finished second four times, never humiliated but never a winner.

John Marttila, Mr. Udall's chief strategist, tried at a New York news conference to dampen speculation that his candidate might be forced to the sidelines by money troubles. Although no money is currently on hand, he said, the campaign is raising about $20,000 a day and has $300,000 in matching funds coming if the Federal Election Commission resumes operations.

Mr. Marttila said the campaign would now begin to focus on ideas, particularly economic questions. With that in mind, and because of limited time, he added, the Udall effort in Pennsylvania will emphasize advertising, not organization.

Campaigning in Pennsylvania, Mr. Udall criticized Mr. Carter's defense of the "ethnic purity" of some neighborhoods, implying that the Georgian would "enshrine the ghetto forever." Mr. Carter, meantime, seemed to retreat a bit on the issue.

The controversy could cost Mr. Carter some of his broad black support. Vernon Jordan, executive director of the Urban League, said in a telegram to the former Governor that he was "deeply disturbed" by what he described as "inflammatory language."

Speaking at a breezy outdoor news conference at the corner of 49th Street and Park Avenue, Mr. Jackson predicted that he would win in Pennsylvania as he had won in the two northern industrial states that have already voted, Massachusetts and New York. He said he was not sorry that he had predicted a majority here, but his staff called it a blunder.

Politicians in Pennsylvania said that Mr. Jackson currently holds the lead in that state's preferential primary, with Mr. Carter probably pressing him most closely.

But the delegate contests, which are entirely separate, appear to be another matter. A loose alliance of elected officials, labor leaders and organization Democrats is organizing what one official called "an army in many uniforms" in the hope of aiding Mr. Humphrey, an old Pennsylvania favorite.

This group, which reportedly includes Mayor Frank Rizzo of Philadelphia as well as Mike Johnson, the most influential labor leader in the state, is backing uncommitted delegates. Jackson delegates and delegates pledged to Gov. Milton J. Shapp, who ended his *Presidential campaign in mid-*March.

Mr. Humphrey will address the labor convention today. It may make key political decisions later in the week.

According to leading Pennsylvania Democrats, Mr. Carter has organized effectively in the suburbs, in rural areas and in some small cities such as Scranton. He has the support of Mayor Peter Flaherty of Pittsburgh, which could prove beneficial.

Mr. Udall has the least visible backing, with his support centered in a liberal-black coalition in Philadelphia.

Election Board Alleges Flaws In Wallace's Primary Petitions

By THOMAS P. RONAN

The State Board of Elections told the district attorneys in seven upstate counties yesterday that it had found evidence of violations of the New York *election law by eight support-*ers of Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama.

An aide said the board had forwarded the evidence to the district attorneys for possible prosecution of the alleged offenders.

*The board named Mark Bab-*lin, the state coordinator of the Wallace campaign for delegates to the Democratic National Convention, and seven former pro-Wallace candidates for delegates in its report to the district attorneys.

It said that the former candidates had falsely declared they had witnessed the signing of petitions for delegate candidates by the persons whose names appeared on them. Mr. Bablin was charged with knowingly filing with the board "a forged instrument"—the petitions.

The first charge is a misdemeanor with a penalty of up to a year in prison and the second is a felony with the penalty depending on the type of felony conviction.

*To get on the ballot in Tues-*day's primary, a candidate had to file petitions bearing 1,250 valid signatures of Democrats. The Wallace forces originally filed delegate slates in 24 of the state's 39 Congressional Districts.

All but three were invalidated by the courts or were withdrawn. None of the remaining Wallace candidates were elected Tuesday.

The board's spokesman said it had conducted an extensive investigation of the alleged violations and had questioned 32 witnesses, including the eight persons named in its report.

Mr. Bablin could not be reached yesterday for comment on the charges. The person who answered the telephone at his home in Amsterdam said *he was campaigning in Penn-*sylvania. He is also the Wallace state coordinator there.

The report was sent to the district attorneys in Queens, Albany, Broome, Oneida, Seneca, Monroe and Cattaragaugus Counties.

Wallace, Despite Four Defeats, Vows to Continue His Campaign

By B. DRUMMOND AYRES Jr.

Special to The New York Times

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 7—Despite four straight primary defeats and a shortage of campaign funds, Gov. George C. Wallace said today that he would continue his fourth campaign for President. He instructed his aides to draw up a shoestring political itinerary that would keep him on the road much of the rest of this month and almost all of May.

"I'm in excellent position," he told a news conference.

That assertion came less than 24 hours after the Governor finished a poor third in the Democratic primary in Wisconsin.

It also followed yesterday's austerity move in which 40 of the Wallace campaign's 50 out-of-state offices were closed and the campaign staff, which once numbered 130, was reduced to a skeleton force of 30 aides and secretaries.

Mr. Wallace said that the 10 delegates he picked up yesterday in Wisconsin—out of a total of 68—constituted a "victory."

"At this time in 1972," he added, "I had 75 delegates. Now I have 104."

The Wallace campaign plan, despite the primary setbacks, appears to call for him to make an effort, however, modest, however modest, in almost every primary state in the hope that he can pick up enough scattered delegates to be a broker at the Democratic National Convention in New York in July.

The Governor's aides were talking today of a new campaign schedule that would take him to Columbus, Ohio, and Detroit, Mich., this weekend, then on to Texas, Arizona, Georgia and Indiana.

"He could spend two weeks or more on the road in the rest of April," Charles Snider, the Wallace manager, said.

The Governor has instructed Mr. Snider to appeal once again by mail to the faithful for *campaign cash. More than 150,-*000 letters will go out this week at a cost of almost $45,-000.

The list is made up of long-time supporters. Many have given numerous times before—each gift has averaged less than $15—and Mr. Snider was confident that they would give once more.

"It's down to the hard core," he said. "The Governor won't continue running if he has to go into debt to do it."

To reduce campaign costs even further, Mr. Wallace also will dispense with television advertising in coming primaries.

"We found in Wisconsin," Mr. Snider said, "that we can get all the media we need by calling news conferences and by putting the Governor on television and radio interview programs.

An Editorial

Schools in Crisis

AGONIZING and difficult a duty as it will be, the parents of Boston must set an example of courage and good citizenship for their children when schools reopen on Sept. 8.

For the sake of their children, themselves and their city they must obey the Phase Two desegregation order of Federal Judge W. Arthur Garrity, Jr.

They must send their sons and daughters to school. If need be, they must use buses to do so — assured that the might of Federal, state, and local law enforcement agencies will be present to preserve every child from harm.

And above all, they must do nothing to disrupt the right of other children to an education.

We say this with compassion and honest understanding of the stresses, uncertainties, and fears which have brought anguish to the families of Boston since forced busing became a reality.

To follow any other course but compliance — as hard as that may be— is to rekindle and even extend the violence that has devoured this city for the past 12 months and perpetuate social injustice in this nation.

We regard it as the responsibility of a newspaper concerned about the well-being of Boston and all its people to contribute sympathetically and constructively to the peaceful resolution of a dilemma that immensely affects so many lives and futures. Therefore we are taking the unusual course of publishing this editorial on Page One of today's editions, in order that every reader may know what we believe public policy should be.

Prediction Pitfalls Shown in Wisconsin

By DEIRDRE CARMODY

The precariousness of forecasting the winner of an election or before all the votes are counted was illustrated in a dizzying succession of conflicting television broadcasts and newspaper headlines in the reporting of the results of Tuesday's race between Jimmy Carter and Morris K. Udall in the Democratic primary in Wisconsin.

At 9:27 P.M., ABC interrupted its program, "The Rookies," to announce that Mr. Udall had won the Wisconsin primary. On the 11:30 P.M. election special on ABC, the Arizona Representative acknowledged the "victory."

Almost an hour later, at 10:22 P.M., NBC reached its own conclusion and said that Mr. Udall had won "by a modest margin."

Finally, at 2:30 A.M. Wednesday, CBS with network television already off the air in the East announced correctly to its West Coast viewers that Mr. Carter, the former Georgia Governor, had won. He won by 6,320 votes.

About 11 P.M., the Washington Post, The New York Daily News, The Milwaukee Sentinel and uncounted other newspapers, some of them reacting to the erroneous NBC and ABC reports, rewrote headlines and opening paragraphs of earlier editions, which had described the closeness of the race and declared Mr. Udall the winner. Hours later, they rewrote those headlines and those leading paragraphs again for still later editions to say that Mr. Carter had won.

It was as if the modern science of computerized political prediction was as open to error as old-fashioned human judgment.

In fact, most network and newspaper editors and sampling statisticians interviewed yesterday said that despite some very sophisticated computer technology, the final decision about when to declare a winner was in effect a human one. It was the decision that enough information had come in, by whatever means the particular newsgathering service was using, on which to base a reasonable conclusion.

A decision not to make a decision was equally difficult. CBS refused to call the race until that 2:30 A.M. broadcast and The New York Times did not commit itself until about 2:45 A.M., when, in its final Wednesday edition, it declared Mr. Carter the winner.

Of the victory calls and their retraction, Jane Watkins, press coordinator for the Udall campaign said:

"I can't see that it did us any harm. We had a moment of winning and the staff got all excited and all revved up. It gave us a psychological lift because for a little while he was a winner."

Hero-at-CBS

At CBS the hero yesterday was Warren J. Mitofsky, director of the election survey unit. Mr. Mitofsky had spent Tuesday evening and the early hours of Wednesday in a large office at 1775 Broadway with a crew of political analysts, statisticians and others who were entering into the computer data from 80 sample precincts throughout Wisconsin. Reporters in those precincts were calling in results as they were available.

"We just kept looking at tat data, and what it was showing in our estimate was a very small Carter margin, but a margin that was not large enough to be reliable," Mr. Mitofsky said.

Meanwhile early returns from the News Election Service, a cooperative that supplies the networks and the wire services with results from all the precincts, were showing Mr. Udall ahead. This was the vote coming in from Miwaukee, Madisonl, the suburbs, smaler cities and larger towns. The outlying areas, where much of the votes are cast on paper ballots and where much of Mr. Carter's strength lay, had not yet begun to report.

Sometime around midnight, someone told Mr. Mitofsky that the two rival networks had declared Mr. Udall the winner.

"Then they have a problem," Mr. Mitosky said.

Mr. Mitosky was also analyzing the results of The New York Times and CBS News poll of 1,744 Wisconsin voters who had been interviewed after they had voted, and ehey showed a very close race. Finally, Mr. Mitofsky, who said that he had no pressure from his superiors to come up with a winner, felt that he was ready to name Mr. Carter.

The NBC news team was sitting in a television studio in Milwaukee, calling in information from its sample precincts to its computer in Cherry Hill, N.J.

"Essentially, we draw a sketch picture through precinct models in the state and we feed those returns into a computer," said Richard C. Wald, president of NBC News. "It is the same thing that politicians have been doing on the backs of envelopes since time immemorial."

The decision to go on the air with Mr. Udall as the winner at 10:22 P.M. was made by three or four of the election analysts, correspondents and consultants.

Richard Scammon, a consultant to NBC, said yesterday morning in the "Today" show that NBC had made its projection on the basis of returns from 100 key precincts but had failed to realize the size of Carter support in areas where votes were counted by paper ballot.

'Error in the Model'

"I suspect we made the error in the original model," Mr. Wald said. "That model says if you get this and this, then you get that. But it was that initial model that was inaccurate."

NBC had had trouble with its computers in the first three primaries, according to Lee Hanna, the NBC News vice president. Mr. Hanna said that the computers had not been used for the Florida and North Carolina primaries because they were being adjusted.

John Thompson, manager of the political unit at ABC News, said that ABC used the same system of basing projections on key precincts that it has used for the last decade. He blamed the faulty projection on "human judgment."

He would not specify the number of key precincts but indicated that it was "more than 60." He said that an analysis of these precincts had showed that "Udall had a clear-cut margin and that he would finish first in a very close race."

"We saw that Carter was running ahead in the farm vote and small village vote," he said, "but we did some figuring and it looked safe to project that Udall would come in first.

"I've never had anyone twist my arm to be first on the air," Mr. Thompson said, denying that there had been any pressure to beat the other networks in declaring a winner. "On the other hand, if we come in first it makes my bosses smile."

Endorsement of Carter Is Sidestepped by Byrne

By RONALD SULLIVAN

Special to The New York Times

TRENTON, April 7—Governor Byrne backed away today from formally endorsing Jimmy Carter, issuing instead a tepid expression of support for the former Georgia Governor for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

High officials of the Byrne administration had insisted as late as last night that Mr. Byrne would endorse Mr. Carter today. But the Governor's statement this afternoon maintained his public neutrality in the race and preserved the Democratic Party's officially uncommitted posture in the state.

Mr. Byrne said he had detected sentiment for Mr. Carter in New Jersey and that he was "willing to do anything I can to help him become better known." But Mr. Byrne contended that "the people don't want any public official to tell them who to vote for."

While Mr. Byrne said Mr. Carter's victory yesterday in the Wisconsin primary was "impressive," he said he was still uncommitted as Governor, even though he had his own "private sentiments."

While resisting any public commitment to Mr. Carter, Mr. Byrne has been working actively in behalf of the candidate for the last month, going as far as having high state officials help Mr. Carter establish the state campaign organization here.

New Jersey will hold its primary on June 8, the same day as California and Ohio. These will be the last primaries and, as such, are regarded as critical. New Jersey will send 108 delegates, or the eighth-largest voting block, to the Democratic National Convention in July.

Election of Delegates

All told, 91 New Jersey delegates will be elected in June, two from each of the state's 40 legislative election districts (with one—the 37th in Bergen County—receiving an extra delegate for turning out the biggest Democratic vote in the last two major elections) and 10 elected in statewide voting.

The 91 elected delegates will then select 17 more to reflect the proportional vote each of the candidates received in the election.

Until Mr. Carter's string of primary victories, New Jersey had been regarded as a strong state for Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, who has not declared his candidacy. Now, however, state Democratic leaders perceive the first rumblings of a Carter bandwagon here.

Furthermore, party leaders now contend that if Mr. Humphrey stands a good chance of stopping Mr. Carter before the convention, he will have to enter the primary as an active candidate in New Jersey by Saturday, when the Democrats hold a series of local conventions to pick local delegate states.

The actual filing deadline for the at-large slate is April 29.

Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington and Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizonia are not viewed by State Democrats as strong candidates in New Jersey. The state is regarded as a battleground between Mr. Carter and Mr. Humphrey.

Initially, Mr. Byrne was impressed by Mr. Carter when they met at a National Governors Conference in 1974. Three weeks ago, they met again in New York City. Afterward, two of the Governor's top aides helped organize Mr. Carter's campaign and were instrumental in arranging the designation of Dan Gaby, a prominent New Jersey liberal, as Mr. Carter's state campaign leader.

Albert Denounces a Report That He Plans to Retire

WASHINGTON, April 7 (UPI)—Speaker Carl Albert angrily denounced today a published report that he would retire at the end of this year and would announce that decision next month.

The report in The New York Ttimes said that Mr. Albert would be leaving Congress when he goes to London as the head of a Congressional delegation to receive a copy of Magna Carta for exhibition during the Bicentennial year. The 25-member group is scheduled to be in London by May 22 for presentation ceremonies.

The report was in a column written by James Reston.

Ford Sees Wisconsin V... As Kissinger Endorsem...

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 7 — President Ford said today that his victory in the Republican Presidential primary in Wisconsin amounted to an endorsement of his Administration's foreign policy and of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger in particular.

"The results in Wisconsin certainly fully justified my faith in Henry Kissinger," the President told 73 White House visitors from the area of Grand Rapids, Mich., Mr. Ford's hometown.

Despite Ronald Reagan's attempts to make Mr. Kissinger's stewardship of national security matters a campaign issue, Mr. Ford said "I fully defended our foreign policy."

"We are at peace," he continued. "We are strong. We are meeting every challenge. And the people in Wisconsin believed what we said. They were supportive of our foreign policy."

The President's remarks, in reply to a question from one of his guests as they met in the Rose Garden, reflected an attempt by the Ford campaign to de-emphasize the national security issue lest it become a political burden in the Texas primary May 1.

"We have some problems there," Mr. Ford said of his next confrontation with Mr. Reagan in Texas. The President will campaign Friday and Saturday in San Antonio, Dallas, El Paso a-d Amarillo and return to Texas just before the primary.

Risk-Taking Admitted

Political aides acknowledged that the President, by interpreting his 55 per cent of the Republican vote in Wisconsin as a referendum on Mr. Kissinger, ran the risk that Mr. Reagan, the former California Governor, could turn the issue to his advantage if he won in Texas.

Mr. Reagan has made criticism of détente with the Soviet Union and of Mr. Ford's national security policy a centerpiece of his challenge. He has repeatedly aroused partisan audiences by pledging to replace Mr. Kissinger if elected.

Ron Nessen, the White House press secretary, affirmed to reporters today that it had been Mr. Ford who directed that his campaign chairman, Rogers C. B. Morton, to stop telling Republicans Mr. Kissinger was unlikely to remain in the Cabinet beyond this year.

Mr. Morton told a group of Republicans in San Jose, Calif., last Sunday that Mr. Kissinger had accumulated "scars" after seven years as America's foreign policy architect. While it would be "bad politics to throw him out," Mr. Morton said, "I would anticipate—and I'm sure I'm right on this—that he would not go on beyond this year."

Mr. Nessen told questioners at a news briefing today that the President told Royston C. Hughes, an aide to Mr. Morton, to telephone the campaign chairman Monday morning and say that Mr. Ford expected everyone in his Admi and campaign organi follow his lead in si Mr. Kissinger.

sues, such as job guarantees for the unemployed, détente with the Russians, aid to minorities and the environment.

The surveys find that the support for Mr. Jackson and Mr. Carter was not nearly so strongly related to voter stands on the major issues. Each had a distinctive appeal only in isolated areas of issues.

In both states, a large portion of Democrats cited the size of the Federal Government as a major issue. And in both states, a large plurality of those concerned about this issue voted for Mr. Carter—57 percent in Wisconsin and 46 percent in New York. He did much better among those who held the conservative view that the central government's role should be reduced.

For example, in Wisconsin he won nearly half of those who preferred a smaller government providing fewer services and less than 30 percent of those who felt that a large government offering many services was better.

In both states, his support tended to come from those on the conservative side of issues, but on many of the issues there was very little difference. For instance, in New York he got 29 percent of those favoring the elimination of welfare programs and 25 percent of those against such policy.

When asked whether Mr. Carter's positions seemed "too unspecific and fuzzy," voters in both states said yes by a margin of 48 to 35 percent.

This was a notion held by almost every sub-group of voters. Only among blacks and those without a high school education did a plurality feel that Mr. Carter's stands have been clear. This suggests that the debate over whether he has confronted the issues candidly may become a salient issue.

Senator Jackson, too, drew support from those Democrats on the conservative side of issues in New York and Wisconsin, but again the differences were not striking.

There was one notable exception, however. Mr. Jackson, for all his efforts to make unemployment and other bread-and-butter concerns work for him, drew his greatest strength from among those concerned about foreign policy issues, such as détente, the military budget and aid to Israel.

Of those in the survey mentioning détente as an issue that influenced their vote, three-quarters voted for Mr. Jackson. Of those concerned about Israel, 84 percent were for him. The vast majority of voters concerned about these issues in New York were Jewish. Mr. Jackson did not campaign in Wisconsin, although his name was on the ballot there.

In New York over the last few weeks, he campaigned under the slogan "Jackson Means Jobs" and urged that the Federal Government take a more active role in providing social services. However, the survey evidence indicates that he has not gotten the message through.

Indeed, in New York, Mr. Jackson did better among those who opposed Federal job guarantees, and who thought it more important to balance the budget than to provide social services.

Margin Is 7,386 Votes

In Wisconsin, the Democratic National Committee's decision last month to accept the state's primary despite the unusual provision that voters can pick up either ballot may have altered the outcome.

Over all, Mr. Carter beat Mr. Udall by a scant 7,386 votes. Mr. Carter led slightly among those identifying themselves as Democrats, while Mr. Udall led slightly among independents, with Republican crossovers holding the balance, according to the survey. Forty-four percent of the Republicans chose Mr. Carter; 27 percent chose Mr. Udall.

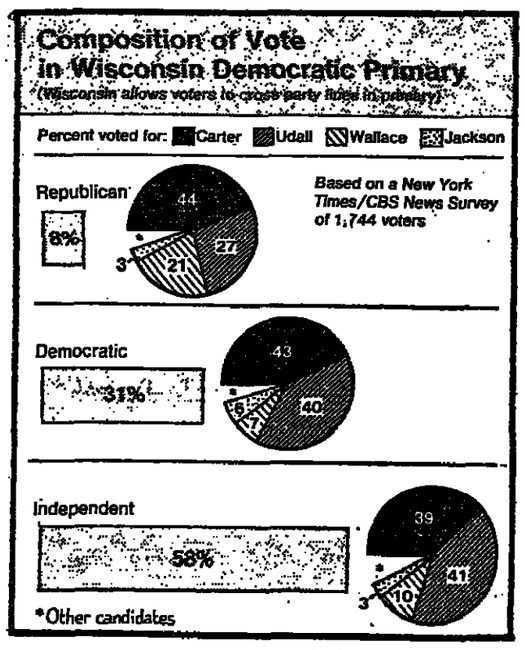
Using the survey data, it is possible to say that the Republican vote for Mr. Carter may have been just enough to give him his 7,386-vote margin.

According to the calculations, Mr. Carter may well have received 22,000 of the Republican votes and Mr. Udall 13,700, giving Mr. Carter a net advantage of 8,300 votes, which is about 1,000 more than his victory margin.

If there had been no Republican cross-overs, the race might have been much closer, and it is conceivable that Mr. Udall could have won.

On the other side, Democratic cross-overs seemed to have helped Ronald Reagan, the former Governor of California. The poll indicated that 11 percent of all voters in the Wisconsin Republican primary were Democrats. They voted for Mr. Reagan by nearly a 2-to-1 margin over President Ford. Indeed, one of every six of the Reagan votes was cast by Democrats.

Assisting The Times in its survey coverage was Prof. Gary R. Orren of the government department at Harvard University.



The New York Times/April 8, 1976

The chart shows what proportion of voters in the Wisconsin Democratic Primary identified themselves as Republicans, Democrats and Independents. For example, 8 percent identified themselves as Republicans, and of these, 44 percent voted for Jimmy Carter, 27 percent for Morris K. Udall, and 21 percent for George C. Wallace.

It was not unusual for Mr. Shea to be a board member of a bank; he is a director of a number of banks and corporations in the metropolitan area, and his 82-lawyer Madison Avenue law firm, Shea, Gould, Climenko, Krameh & Casey, often represents businesses looking for lucrative government contracts or simply needing some understanding from local officials.

A 1931 graduate of Georgetown Law School and a veteran of 36 years of private practice in the city, Mr. Shea has called on talents in addition to his legal skill to make his name. This was illustrated by the answer provided by his law partner and longtime political associate, Bernard J. Ruggieri, when asked how good a lawyer Mr. Shea was. "He's got the best business mind I've ever come into contact with," Mr. Ruggieri said.

'An Incredible Knack'

A remarkably fit 6-footer, Mr. Shea also depends upon his presence to work his will.

"He has an incredible knack for relaxing people," said Richard Aurelio, a public relations executive who served as John V. Lindsay's deputy mayor.

Mr. Ruggieri said that Mr. Shea "can make you feel right away like he's known you all his life," adding:

"And it doesn't matter whether he's talking to a peanut vendor at Shea Stadium or the president of a major corporation."

Mr. Shea has been in and around athletics from his high school days. Born in the Washington Heights section of Manhattan on June 21, 1907, Mr. Shea excelled in sports at George Washington High School and obtained academic-athletic scholarships to New York University, which he attended for a year, and Georgetown, where he received his undergraduate and law degrees.

He returned to the city after school, moving to Brooklyn where his father had done real-estate work. He held several posts in the state government, but, more important, in 1934 met and became the protégé of George V. McLaughlin, the patriarch of the Brooklyn Democratic organization.

In 1937, Mr. Shea married May Nora Shaw. The couple, who have three grown children, Kathy, Pat and William A. Jr., now live in Sands Point, L.I.

It was 20 years later that Mr. Shea became widely known in this area. Appointed by Mayor Robert F. Wagner to head a committee to create a new baseball team in New York, Mr. Shea conducted the mission with dogged pursuit at a time when even such intrepid people as Branch Rickey, the baseball elder statesman, gave him no chance. In 1962, the New York Mets team was born, and two years later it moved into its new stadium.

His reputation as the man to conduct negotiations between politicians and the business world has only grown since then. In one such instance, he obtained a cable franchise in New York for TelePromTer. In another, he engineered the sale of $4 million worth of Shoup voting machines to the city without competitive bidding.

His political instincts have remained sure. In recent years, he has invested considerable time and money in the candidacies of two old friends from the Brooklyn Democratic organization. The two men? Abraham D. Beame and Hugh L. Carey.

CLARK PRESSING FOR YOUTH VOTE

Gets a Quiet Reception at St. John's U. in Queens—He Did Better Upstate

By LUCINDA FRANKS

Ramsey Clark—hands in his pockets, and his feet, in Earth shoes, planted firmly on the stage — was invoking the thoughts of Aristotle, Anatole France and Huey Newton.

He told his audience of students at St. John's University, in Queens, about the "repression by police against the poor," about how people like Mr. Newton, the black activist, had never been taught to read, about the Nixon Administration's "theory of crime control —the use of deadly force."

The students, a small turnout of about 150, were silent. There were some admiring faces and there were some looks of skepticism.

Mr. Clark's speech was the second in a series of campus appearances he is making in an effort to win the youth vote in his campaign for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator.

And, according to his aides, the stop at St. John's University, which is generally regarded as a conservative, Republican-leaning campus, was a tough one.

After Mr. Clark's address, the students talked among themselves about the former United States Attorney General.

"I like him but it's almost as if he's too good to be true," said Lois Rosenfeld, who is 22 years old.

Another student, Micahel Rendine, was more suspicious. "He's coming to us and preaching about how so many crimes are committed by people under 21 and about disadvantaged people like Huey Newton, but people of his generation are responsible for that," he said.

"I grew up in the Bronx and I learned to read because my teacher cracked my knuckles if I didn't. I just don't think his idealism is realistic. He can't change things if nobody has been successful in changing them for 50 years."

Things went better at the first stop last week, at the Binghamton campus of the State University of New York.

"The kids went wild—they interrupted him about 20 times with applause," said Kim Comart, Mr. Clark's campus coordinator. "But some of these kids today are pretty cynical."

Mr. Clark, wearing the casual corduroy jacket that he is often seen in, talked to the students at St. John's as though he was a professor discoursing on philosophy. They tried to pin him down.

"You say that crime cannot be controlled by force and jail," one student asked. "What are you proposing in its place?"

"Well," Mr. Clark said softly, "it may be naive, but I believe that people given a decent environment will not commit crimes."

Mr. Comart said that Mr. Clark would talk at Columbia University today and the University of Rochester tomorrow. The campaign, he said, had so far raised about $150,000 and had already gathered more workers than Mr. Clark had in his 1974 race for the Senate when he opposed Senator Jacob K. Javits.

Cunningham Drops Motion; Is Ordered to Testify

By MARCIA CHAMBERS

Justice Leonard H. Sandler of State Supreme Court has directed Patrick J. Cunningham to appear before a special grand jury investigating the possible sale of judgeships in the Bronx.

Justice Sandler disclosed his order after Mr. Cunningham, the Democratic state chairman and Bronx County leader, yesterday cut short a new challenge to dismiss a subpoena in what appeared to be a response to criticism that he was using delaying tactics to avoid appearing before the panel.

According to a source familiar with Mr. Cunningham's legal actions he suddenly decided to withdraw the motion, filed Tuesday in State Supreme Court, because "his recourse to his constitutional rights was being misconstrued as a dilatory tactics."

Justice Sandler, who presides over corruption cases brought by Maurice H. Nadjari, the special state anticorruption prosecutor, worked out an agreement with lawyers for both sides on the date scheduled to Mr. Cunningham appearance before the grand jury several days ago.

The judge refused to disclose the date of Mr. Cunningham's appearance, but other court officials indicated it would be some time next week.

The date was set following three months of litigation in the state courts and after the Court of Appeals, the state's highest tribunal, last week ordered Mr. Cunningham to appear before the special grand jury.

Carey's Warning

But on Tuesday, Mr. Cunningham again moved to quash his subpoena, this time on the ground that the panel had been unconstitutionally impaneled because Federal, state and municipal employees earning more than $1,000 a year are disqualified from grand jury service.

Mr. Cunningham's latest motion in his subpoena fight came one day after Governor Carey indicated a growing impatience with Mr. Cunningham's legal difficulties. "There's a day his remedies are exhausted, and that day is fast approaching," said the Governor of the man he handpicked to be the Democratic state chairman.

Gregory Perrin, Mr. Cunningham's lawyer, said yesterday that there would be no further proceedings in the state courts to stop the subpoena prior to Mr. Cunningham's appearance before the grand jury.

However, Mr. Perrin refused to comment whether he might, in the meantime, initiate legal proceedings in the Federal courts. And he would not say whether new legal arguments might again be mounted in the state courts at the time Mr. Cunningham is actually brought before the grand jury.

It is at that time that Mr. Cunningham would most likely be asked by Mr. Nadjari to sign a waiver of immunity from prosecution on his testimony before the grand jury. Under Section 22 of the state's Election Law, if Mr. Cunningham refuses to sign such a waiver he automatically forfeits his party position. Mr. Cunningham's lawyers have said that Section 22 is unconstitutional, although it is yet to be tested.

Despite some legal uncertainties, it is possible that Mr. Cunningham will have to make that choice before April 23, the day the Democratic State Committee meets to elect its chairman, Mr. Cunningham has previously said he will run for that post.

Commuters by Car Polled On Effects of Rising Costs

Most car users would switch to car pools rather than to mass transit if higher costs including increases on present tolls on more bridges tolls—were imposed upon them, according to a survey released yesterday by the Tristate Regional Planning Commission.

The commision conducted a survey of 2,000 people in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut who use their cars to ride to work.

It found that two-thirds of those questioned said that higher costs would not cause them to change their riding habits.

Check your grocery bill and chart your highs and lows with the new Casio BIOLATOR

Casio's new BIOLATOR is not only a superb 4-function calculator, you can also have the fun of computing your physical, emotional and intellectual states for any date according to the biorhythm life cycle theory.

As a calculator, the BIOLATOR offers:

- Big, bright green 8-digit display
- Four functions with full floating decimal
- Constant for +, –, x and ÷
- Computes day of the week for any date (1901-1999)
- Computes day intervals between any two dates in the 20th Century.

In addition, the BIOLATOR makes it easy to calculate the 3 biorhythm cycles of life—physical, sensitivity (emotional) and intellectual—which, according to the theory, help determine your condition on a given date. For example:

You were born on June 13, 1947. What will be your biorhythm condition on July 4, 1976?

Step I

	YEAR		MONTH		DAY			READ-OUT
Punch in:	76	DATE	7	DATE	4	DATE	–	76.07.04.–0
Punch in:	47	DATE	6	DATE	13	DATE	BIO	–12.03.22–

Your guide numbers are:

Physical	12
Sensitivity (Emotional)	3
Intellectual	22

Step II

Locate these guide numbers on the BIOLATOR graph.

Step III

Check your condition for July 4, 1976 from the table shown on the right, according to the biorhythm life cycle theory:

Your physical number is 12 which turns out to be a critical day in which you should exercise caution.

Your sensitivity number is 3—a harmonious day for social relationships.

Your intellectual number is 22—no day for decisions.

P (PHYSICAL)	+	2–11	PEAK DAYS	ENDURANCE AND STRENGTH AT HEIGHT

	0	1–17	CRITICAL DAYS	CAUTION = ERROR PRONE
	–	18–33	BELOW PAR DAYS	AVOID DECISIONS, NEW PROJECTS

Casio makes no claim as to the validity of the biorhythm theory. Regardless, we think you'll have fun with this new Casio calculator.

Bridge: New York Experts Dominate Cavendish Pairs Tournament

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

The domination of the New York experts was a surprising feature of the Cavendish Invitation Pairs tournament last weekend.

In a field in which almost half the 80 players have competed in international competition, and included stars from many parts of the United States and farther afield, 11 of the 12 players who headed the final standings were New Yorkers.

The 12th was Bill Eisenberg of Los Angeles, who learned his bridge here more than a decade ago and has since won two world team titles. In a month, he will be in Monte Carlo, representing the United States for the fifth time in eight years.

In the Cavendish event, Eisenberg had occasion to admire the play of his partner, Jim Cayne of New York, on the diagramed deal, which helped them to finish second. The bidding shown in the diagram might seem to be an egregious typographical error, but tournament players will recognize that a convention was in use.

The Flannery Convention

After Cayne passed with the borderline South hand, Eisenberg opened as North with two diamonds. This was the Flannery convention, now popular in tournament play, promising four spades, five hearts and about 12-16 high-card points. Knowing about the five-three heart fit, South simply closed the bidding with four hearts.

The hands do not fit well, and prospects of making 10 tricks are poor. However, Cayne received some help when West made the unfortunate lead of a diamond, and he proceeded to take full advantage. He put up the queen in dummy, in the hope that East would unwisely play the king if he held that card, and won the trick.

Next he led to the diamond ace, crossed to the spade ace, and ruffed dummy's remaining diamond. Another spade lead to dummy collected East's queen, and a club was led to the ace. A spade trick was surrendered to the jack, and West played his last spade for his partner to ruff and South to overruff. The position was now this:

♡ K 9 8 4 3

WEST
♡ A Q 10 6

EAST

SOUTH
♡ J
♣ Q 10 6 2

Now the problem was to avoid the loss of three trump tricks. When the jack was led from the closed hand, West made an error by putting up his ace and leading a club. Dummy ruffed and the heart nine was led, since the trump position had been revealed by East's discard. It was then simple to lead the heart nine, after which West could only make one trick.

Cayne would have had a harder decision to make if West had played low. It would be tempting to put up the king in the dummy, losing the contract. Playing low from the dummy would be the right play in theory as well as in practice, and Cayne would no doubt have made it.

JAILED IN ERROR, YOUTH IS SUICIDE

He Hangs Himself in Cell After Arrest in Yonkers

Special to The New York Times

YONKERS, April 7—A 20-year-old man who according to the Westchester County Sheriff's Department records was arrested by mistake hanged himself in his cell today in the Yonkers City Jail.

The youth, Steven Karagianis of Yonkers, was stopped in his car at about midnight last night by two Yonkers patrolmen who had a warrant for his arrest as a probation violator, according to Lieut. Harry Nase of the Yonkers Police Department.

A lawyer for Mr. Karagianis, Jeremiah Guttman, said today that the warrant, on a minor marijuana charge, had been dismissed by a County Court judge in January. Spokesmen for the Westchester County Sheriff's Department and the Division of Criminal Justice Services in Albany confirmed that their agencies had canceled the warrant in early March.

The youth's mother, Muriel Karagianis, said today that her son had telephoned her from the Yonkers police station shortly after midnight. "He was very upset," she recalled. "He told me they had picked him on the warrant."

Mrs. Karagianis contacted Mr. Gutman, she said, and after a telephone call to the jail, he told her an officer had said they would have to wait until morning to settle the matter.

"Then I called the jail," she said, "and left word to tell him that everything would be all right and I'd be there in the morning."

The family received one more telephone call from the police, she said, telling them to move the youth's car, which had been left in a no parking zone.

At about 4 A.M., Mrs. Karagianis said, police officers and a priest arrived at the house and told her and her husband, John, that their son was dead.

Mr. Gutman said he had informed the Westchester Sheriff's Department that the warrant had been canceled in a letter written March 5, shortly after two deputy sheriffs attempted to arrest Mr. Karagianis at his home.

When he called the police station last night, Mr. Gutman said, he explained the situation to the officer on duty, but was told to wait until an arraignment the next morning. "I said, 'Watch the guy, because he's been depressed,'" Mr. Gutman added.

Chief Sal D'Iorio of the Sheriff's Department confirmed this afternoon that his department had canceled the warrant on March 9 and transmitted the cancellation notice to the arrest record agency in Albany, to the Federal Bureau of Investigation in Washington and to all Police Departments, including Yonkers.

"Yonkers got the cancellation notice on March 9," Chief D'Iorio said. "It would go into their Teletype room."

Chess: Larsen and Geller in Lead At Las Palmas Tournament

By ROBERT BYRNE

Special to The New York Times

LAS PALMAS, Canary Islands, April 7—Bent Larsen of Denmark and Efim Geller of the Soviet Union held the lead after three rounds of the fifth Las Palmas International Tournament here in the Santa Catalina Hotel. Each has scored 2½ points.

Larsen started with a hard-fought draw against me and then drove through an ingenious mating attack to defeat the Spanish champion, José Fraguela, in the second round. He confused Florin Gheorghiu of Rumania by unorthodox opening play in the third round to score his second victory.

Geller's sharp piece play against Robert Hübner of West Germany in the first round got him a convincing victory. However, he was lucky to draw in the second round when I blundered away a winning advantage on the white side of a Marshall attack Ruy Lopez. In the third round, he defeated Fraguela, who spoiled a sound position by an erroneous center break.

Kenneth Rogoff of the United States obtained a shaky draw with Gheorghiu in the first round, but outplayed Lajos Portisch of Hungary to score an important victory in round two. After building up a powerful position against Garcia Padron of Spain in the third round, he blundered and had to take a draw.

I got off to a slow start, taking my third consecutive draw in the third round against Roberto Debarnot of Argentina.

The 16-man tournament will finish April 25.

The system 5 . . . P-Q4 and 6 . . . P-QN3 that Rogoff used against Portisch is currently a favorite of Mikhail Tal. Portisch's plan, 8 PxP, 9 N-K5 and 10 P-B4, was an ambitious attempt to play for kingside attack, and Rogoff's 11 . . . P-N3 was even more ambitious in aiming for the occupation of White's K4 by a knight.

Portisch should have kept his K4 covered by 12 B-B2; instead his 12 B-R3 led to Rogoff's achieving a powerful grip on the light squares after 14 . . . N-K5. The one chance Portisch had to stay in the game was then 15 Q-Q3 with the exchange sacrifice 15 . . . P-QR4; 16 P-B4, B-R3; 17 QxP, QxQ; 18 PxQ, BxR.

Rogoff locked up control of the light squares with 15 . . . B-R3 and his 16 . . . Q-R5! prevented the KB from returning to action by 17 P-N3 and 18 B-N2. Portisch had relied on the pawn sacrifices 17 P-B4 to open a diagonal for his QB; the next step in his strategy of exploiting weak dark squares in the black king position was 20 P-K6, but, since he could not dislodge Rogoff's knight, he could never line up queen and QB on the long diagonal.

After 23 P-N3 Portisch did not get a chance to go through with 24 B-N2, 25 BxN and 26 Q-B3 because Rogoff hit him first with a sharp 23 . . . NxNP! To accept the knight with 24 PxN, QxPch; 25 K-R1, QxNP; 26 Q-N2, QxP; 27 R-K1, R2-K2 would have yielded Black five pawns for a piece and an overwhelming position.

Nevertheless, after 24 R-K1, Rogoff forced the exchange of queens with 24 . . . Q-K5! and went on to win the ending, even in the face of terrible time trouble.

Macy's Candy Store Is Among 18 Outlets Listed as Violators

The candy department at Macy's Herald Square store was charged yesterday by the Health Department with having violated the health code.

The Health Department's announcement, which listed a total of 18 violators, said mouse excreta had been found in various areas of the premises, along with breaks in the ceiling and walls of the candy storage area. A spokesman for the store said he had no comment on the alleged violations.

If the reported violations are not corrected by the time of a final inspection, the places are subject to closing.

The announcement said 13 other establishments, following final inspection, had corrected violations, had reopened or had been closed.

Oceans: Our Last Frontier

By ANATOLE BROYARD

THE DRAMA OF THE OCEANS. By Elisabeth Mann Borgese. 258 pages. Illustrated. Harry N. Abrams. $25.

The oceans are our last frontier, writes Elisabeth Mann Borgese. They belong to no one and to everyone. All life began in them, and they are our best hope for survival on land, because it is in the oceans that today's ecological crisis reaches its climax. Though it is not common knowledge, ocean organisms produce more than half of the world's oxygen. If pollution and radioactive wastes continue to pour into the sea, all life will eventually cease "and the stench of putrefaction would send coastal populations scrambling toward the interior and many would perish in the struggle for the decreased supply of breathable air." Even now, Mrs. Borgese observes, the far-reaching effects of DDT are thinning the eggshells of brown pelicans to a point where their young are being decimated. DDT and related chemicals are causing sea lions to give birth prematurely to pups, which soon die. Though three-quarters of the world's population—the poorer part—depends on fish for animal protein, the automated and computerized fishing techniques of more advanced countries are increasingly threatening that supply.

Elisabeth Borgese

The Colliding Continents

But "The Drama of the Oceans" is not merely an ecological jeremiad. While she is chairman of the Planning Council of the International Ocean Institute, the author is also the daughter of Thomas Mann and her brilliant treatment of the romance of oceans is reminiscent of that passage in "The Magic Mountain," in which Hans Castorp sees, through a lover's eyes, the phylogenetic and ontogenetic processes that produced Frau Chauchat.

Mrs. Borgese tells us of 15,000-foot peaks on the ocean floor, and abysses twice as deep. She writes of the ocean floor kneading itself like dough, turning itself inside out, every few hundred million years, while the continents on which we live float without disturbance, too light to be drawn into these labor pains. She describes continents colliding on the surface of the ocean, throwing up mountains where they meet, and of others being pulled farther apart. We learn that the legendary Atlantis did exist, that it was first partly buried by volcanic eruptions, then blown up, some time between 1500 and 1400 B.C., by another volcanic explosion. In 1883, a similar fate befell Krakatoa, a much smaller island in the Pacific.

While the chapters on ocean archeology and ocean warfare are romantic in a more conventional way, Mrs. Borgese's depiction of ocean architecture competes with science fiction. Already, there are workable plans for creating island cities of varying sizes that will incorporate such Utopian features as rational design, clean air, virtual noiselessness and a freedom from property disputes. Ocean architecture is the next step, the author suggests, in the great two-stage migration of this century: from the country to the city and from the city to the coast. Man, it seems, is so irresistibly drawn to the coastlines that it may be true that he was once an ocean dweller himself, as certain features of his physiology suggest.

We are all familiar with ecological warnings, but in "The Drama of the Oceans," Mrs. Borgese devotes several encouraging chapters to the ocean as an immense natural resource that we have only begun to utilize. Though still in its infancy, the development of scientific sea farming could dwarf land farming as a food source. In addition to multiplying food stocks, ocean farming can function at the same time as a gigantic sewage treatment plant. So far, we have seen mostly the negative effects of ecology: The positive side, as described here, is a welcome prospect.

The Ocean as the Womb of Life

The ocean, according to Mrs. Borgese, can still be the womb of life. Ocean mining is the logical place to look for the answer to our diminishing mineral resources. We can also learn to derive low-cost thermal energy from the sea, even harness the power of its many "rivers" or currents. Men have always spoken of the ocean in terms of infinity, and, to all practical purposes, its resources are nearly limitless—if properly used.

The author's last chapter, "New Life for the Oceans," is devoted to a number of propositions now being examined by national and international, official and unofficial organizations. Their substance is a reasoned attempt to re-create the ocean as the benign "great mother" she once was.

The illustrations in "The Drama of the Oceans" are properly striking, ranging from ancient maps to models of futuristic cities, from eerie depths to sludge-covered surfaces. Perhaps in the melodramatic context of the sea, which has had its share of poetry, the most affecting photograph is one of the paper-thin shell of the brown pelican's egg, so weakened by a heedless human gesture, 10 times removed, that when its mother tries to warm it, the chick spills its life out into the straw and mud of the nest.

Peking Convulsion

The political struggle in Peking that has been silently and secretly fought out in the three months since Chou En-lai's death has now resulted in a major political convulsion.

Hua Kuo-feng not only has been promoted from Acting Prime Minister to Prime Minister, but also has been designated First Deputy Chairman of the Chinese Communist Party's Central Committee. Since these posts were given him at the suggestion of Chairman Mao Tse-tung, Mr. Hua has in effect been publicly designated as Mao's ordained successor as well as operating head of the Chinese Government and Communist Party.

Simultaneously, Teng Hsiao-ping, whom the late Chou En-lai had rescued from disgrace and installed as his intended successor, has been dropped from all his official posts and even his continued membership in the Communist Party has been made contingent on future good behavior. Most chillingly, Peking announces that "the nature of the Teng Hsiao-ping problem has turned into one of antagonistic contradiction," a conclusion that bodes ill for Mr. Teng's future.

The meaning of all this hinges on the interpretation of the unexpected mass protest demonstration that exploded in Peking on Monday in support of Chou En-lai and, by implication, of his protégé, Teng Hsiao-ping. Yesterday's announcements refer to this political demonstration as a "counterrevolutionary incident," implying that it was organized and led by Teng supporters who also oppose Mao Tse-tung.

But if the pro-Teng faction could mount such a major effort in Peking after many weeks of ceaseless, veiled, anti-Teng denunciations in all Chinese media, then it may be suspected that this faction is too strong to take defeat supinely. It is possible that the decision to depose Teng and elevate Hua could signal the beginning and not the end of another long internal tug-of-war.

There is, however, an alternative explanation of the Peking demonstration that precipitated yesterday's events. There is the possibility that Hua Kuo-feng or his supporters deliberately arranged for last Monday's demonstration, carrying out a planned provocation that would finally induce Mao Tse-tung to resolve the issue as they wished it to be settled.

By making Mr. Hua Prime Minister, Chairman Mao virtually invites him to dispose of Mr. Teng before the latter can gather such forces as he may have. Even so, a hint that these events might represent a compromise is suggested by the decision to retain Teng as a member of the Chinese Communist Party, and not to cast him utterly into ignominious disgrace.

Meanwhile this week's demonstration of Byzantine-style court politics in Peking must raise new questions about the stability and future of Communist China, questions which give comfort to China's enemies in Moscow and elsewhere while posing new doubts and new worries for China's friends in Washington and throughout the world.

Rx for Stagflation

At first sight, the budget that Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healey has presented to the British Parliament appears contradictory.

On one side, it anticipates a deficit of $12.5 billion, with expenditures exceeding revenues by 22 percent. On the other side, Mr. Healey is seeking to reduce the rate of inflation by calling upon the trade unions to limit their wage demands to 3 percent—an average increase of only $3.40 a week compared to the past year's pay limit of about $12 a week—in exchange for a proferred package of tax exemptions and wider tax brackets to increase the workers' take-home pay.

In fact, this combination of budgetary stimulus and quid-pro-quo wage ceiling and tax cuts is not contradictory but is ingeniously devised to deal with the real problem Britain faces. That problem is not simply inflation but "stagflation," that perplexing modern economic disease that combines inflation with stagnation.

Sluggish British growth has raised the level of unemployment to one and one-quarter million workers —very high by British standards. If the present trend of rising unemployment continues, there are likely to be over one and one-half million out of work by the end of this year. There is nothing in the British situation today that resembles excess demand; on the contrary, budget stimulus is called for to get the economy growing faster in real terms.

But, for that to happen it is crucial that the rate of wage increases be held down. That's where Mr. Healey's proposed bargain with the unions comes in. What he is trying to do is to translate an over-all increase in demand into real growth without regenerating inflation.

If labor accepts the 3 percent limit on pay gains, it should do better in real terms not only because of the tax benefits it would receive but also because of the slowdown in inflation. The wild dog-chasing-his-own-tail phenomenon has undermined the value of the British pound, hurt Britain in export markets and even sapped the vitality of the home market. It is still uncertain, however, that the Trades Union Congress will accept the new pay limit, which many militant and left-wing labor leaders regard as very hard cheese.

Mr. Healey is not limiting his policies for noninflationary growth to the overall budget deficit and the wage-holddown, but is also proposing a set of measures to spur British investment to improve the efficiency of industry. The stock market rose after digesting his budget. It may seem paradoxical that a Labor Government can make the stock market rise, when the Conservatives have, with considerable justice, accused the Government of treating with the labor unions as the arbiters of national tax policy.

But it may be that only a Labor Government could make the sort of deal to stop wage-push inflation that Mr. Healey is now proposing, and at the same time offer a significant package of tax incentives and subsidies to industry. It will be a remarkable achievement if the new Government can persuade British labor to accept the deal—and thereby set the nation back on the path to stable growth. James Callaghan's first major task as Prime Minister will be to use his credit with the unions to bring them aboard.

Dead Heat . . .

Voters in New York and Wisconsin produced a perfectly balanced political result in Tuesday's primaries. Each of the three active Democratic candidates achieved something and so did the fourth, shadow candidate—Senator Hubert H. Humphrey.

Senator Henry M. Jackson won a handsome victory in New York State. If he did not quite achieve the landslide for which he originally hoped, Senator Jackson nevertheless showed here as he did in Massachusetts that he has firm support among voters who are central to the Democratic Party coalition. He was expected to do well and he did.

For Representative Morris K. Udall, these primaries comprised a bittersweet experience. Before all the votes had been counted, he seemed to have won in Wisconsin his first primary, only to have his apparent victory slip away in the final returns. As in previous Wisconsin primaries, the outcome is clouded by the fact that voters there are permitted to cast a ballot in either party's primary. Thus it is impossible to know how many Republican voters may have contributed, if at all, to former Gov. Jimmy Carter's tiny winning margin.

Governor Carter, for his part, can point to the fact that he did not invest anything like the time and money in Wisconsin that Mr. Udall did. In achieving his victory, he not only maintained his remarkable record of success in these early primaries but also demonstrated once again his appeal to a broad cross-section of voters.

Governor Carter failed, however, in his optimum objective, which was to defeat Mr. Udall decisively and thereby convert the Democratic race into a two-man contest between himself and Senator Jackson. Mr. Udall not only made Wisconsin virtually a dead heat but also came in with a notably strong second-place showing in New York.

The Democratic race remains stubbornly three-sided —and that is the way that Senator Humphrey would like to see it remain. He is the second choice of most of the Udall and Jackson delegates if their own candidates fall short. But both candidates have to remain viable until the convention to prevent Governor Carter from achieving a runaway success.

. . . the Harris Diversion

Former Senator Fred Harris of Oklahoma meanwhile has apparently decided to abandon his active candidacy because he has not been able to raise sufficient funds. Mr. Harris's candidacy may prove to have been costly to Senator Humphrey's hopes. Surveys of voters in New Hampshire and Massachusetts suggested that if Mr. Harris had not been on the ballot, those who voted for him would have supported Mr. Udall and made him a winner in both states. He, not Governor Carter, would have become the front-runner and the whole pattern of the early primaries would have been altered.

As events actually developed, Representative Udall fought his way to the leadership of the liberal Democrats but an impressive victory continues to elude him. Those Democrats who would like to see their party renominate Senator Humphrey must hope for Mr. Udall to do at least as well in the remaining primaries as he did on Tuesday.

If Mr. Udall should falter, every reading of liberal opinion indicates that most of his supporters would shift to Governor Carter because they distrust Senator Jackson's hawkish views on foreign policy. Such an accession of strength to the already thriving Carter candidacy would almost certainly spell success for the former Georgia Governor and kill Mr. Humphrey's hopes.

The now-defunct Harris candidacy may thus be one of those small, unforeseen but critical contingencies of politics. For Senator Humphrey, it would be a most ironic contingency inasmuch as Mr. Harris is an old friend and was co-manager of the Humphrey campaign of 1968.

Deferring Stavisky

Following the override last week by the State Assembly of the Governor's veto of the Stavisky bill, pressure has been building for similar action in the Senate. The heavy lobbying to overturn the veto ignores the disastrous impact a precipitate enactment of this measure would have on the city.

The crux of the matter is that it would add a staggering $140 million to next year's school expenses. This would either push New York toward bankruptcy or force such a drastic reshuffling of the city's funds as to cripple all other services.

Sound legislative strategy at this juncture calls for an immediate agreement neither to override nor to sustain the veto. For the moment, it would be best to view the bill merely as a powerful prod to all concerned to make another re-examination of the money available and to recalculate how it can best be spent to protect the quality of elementary and secondary education. Final action on the Stavisky bill now would in fact scuttle such a reappraisal. An override would mandate the expenditure of funds, regardless of the consequences to the city's future.

The intent of the Stavisky bill remains sound: to prevent the schools from being singled out for inordinate budget cuts. The city's future itself depends in large measure on the assurance that even an austerity budget assigns high priority to education.

But to protect the schools' interests requires more than the addition of funds. Although the question of the schools' share of the city's depleted treasury remains important, it cannot be fairly answered—and it should not be brought to a vote—until it is clearly shown that all funds that are available for the purpose are indeed being properly utilized for strictly educational purposes.

City Crisis: The Construction Factor

To the Editor:

Congratulations on your March 24 editorial "Rizzo's Liberty," in which you note the power of the Building Trades Council in Philadelphia. Alas, in our town the construction industry probably has even more power but doesn't brandish it so boorishly as in less-sophisticated Philadelphia.

Before the budget crisis hit Gotham, the city would typically spend over $1.1 billion per year on construction. Compare this to the typical take on the city sales tax of $525 million; city income tax, $440 million, and parking violations bureau, $43 million (the latter has always enchanted the Mayor while it makes the common folks play a game of musical chairs with their cars until they find it easier to settle elsewhere). You will see that the taxpayer has sacrificed plenty for city construction. Though silent and unseen for its magnitude, city construction is a bigger item than the city's contribution to welfare.

In my opinion, the Yankee Stadium project, much as it may be municipal malfeasance, really didn't cost the taxpayers one cent, because if the money hadn't been spent there it would have been spent tearing down and rebuilding police stations, firehouses, libraries, etc. in all boroughs. The point is, in my opinion, that a part of the capital budget has always been the personal property of the construction industry.

Few in city government will admit that construction could have anything to do with the city's financial problems. They will say that such expenditures are economic "pump priming" and all good. Such a view shows ignorance of economics. Pump priming occurs through expenditures by only the Federal Government, since it generates the money supply. Pump priming never occurs through the expenditures of a locality that must rob Peter to pay Paul. To make it worse, the Pauls are often nonresidents.

It will be interesting to see if the city starts building new firehouses, police stations, libraries, etc. before it reopens its closed ones.

Antitrust Paradox

To the Editor:

Three recent news stories puzzle me:

- I.B.M., which accounts for half of the United States' nonmilitary and nonagricultural exports, is the subject of continuing antitrust action to break up the corporation into three parts.
- A.T.&T., which has maintained its basic rate of 10 cents for local telephone pay calls for 25 years, is similarly subject to Government action designed to separate it from Western Electric and Bell Laboratories.
- The United States Postal Service stands on the "brink of bankruptcy," but Congress is reluctant to subsidize it further unless it stops cutting back mail service.

How can a Government that can't run its own business expect to run two of the country's best and most complex businesses? With Government assistance, we may soon be importing computers from Japan, and Congress may have to subsidize telephones to keep residential phone charges at "only" $50 a month.

Wrong Target

To the Editor:

Your March 27 editorial "Pulitzer's 'Garbage'," may have been right on target. But to avoid any confusion, the school district whose board of education decided to remove books from the schools' libraries is indeed in Levittown, though it is not the Levittown School District. It is the Island Trees School District, at the eastern or, some might say, the right wing of the community. The Levittown schools have had enough, true and false, written about them. They don't need this implication now.

No-Fault 'Red Herring'

To the Editor:

Your editorial of March 24 is correct in stating that the no-fault insurance concept has been oversold. Unfortunately, you yourself continue to oversell this plan, although now for different reasons than the original argument that it would reduce insurance rates. You still argue that no-fault laws would stabilize premiums. The evidence is that premiums are rising in states with no-fault laws as well as in the others. You also repeat the error of many well-meaning consumer advocates who have spent much of their resources fighting for what is essentially a red herring.

You say that auto insurance should be like fire insurance and workmen's compensation, paying benefits without trying to determine negligence. Actually auto insurance is exactly like homeowner insurance which has taken the place of "fire" insurance. If your car burns down you collect on the "comprehensive" part of your policy. But if someone is injured on your premises, you are liable for damages if you can be proved negligent. Thus, homeowner insurance includes liability coverage just as does the traditional auto insurance. As for workmen's compensation, at least employers have a chance to buy it at low cost through a state agency. Nor is it true that many accident victims received no aid under the old auto insurance concept. Most did get at least medical care, usually through Blue Cross and other health-care plans.

Now we're being forced to buy what is essentially merely accident insurance from a high-cost auto insurance company instead of from low-cost group-care plans such as Blue Cross, H.I.P., employer sick leave, etc. Blue Cross and other insurers now are barred from providing benefits for victims of auto accidents.

The Banished Doctors

To the Editor:

On March 27, the Israeli military government in the West Bank summarily banished two physicians, one from Hebron and one from El Bireh, to prevent their nomination and likely victory over candidates Israel supported in the upcoming municipal elections (news story March 29). The attempt by the wife of one of the physicians to test the lawfulness of this expulsion in the Israeli Supreme Court was frustrated by the military authorities who sent the physician across the border fifteen minutes before the petition was to be heard.

This act contravenes international law, the law of belligerent occupation and Israeli due process, for the Israeli High Court of Justice does review decrees of the military government. It is an especially sad irony that it violates the very Universal Declaration of Human Rights which Israel has so forcefully invoked on behalf of Soviet Jewry. Article 9 of the declaration prohibits arbitrary exile; provisions of the International Covenant, now in effect, utter, in substance, the same prohibition.

The manifest illegality of the banishment is exceeded only by its political stupidity. Expulsion of political leaders from the West Bank does not eliminate Palestinian leadership; it only embitters the community, fuels extreme positions, more accepted and ultimate accommodation more difficult and costly. Since 1948, citizens of the Israeli leadership have been unable to understand that you cannot "send the Palestinians away"; they must learn to live with their legitimate aspirations.

The Department of State would make an important political and human contribution to the settlement of the conflict by protesting this violation of law and insisting on the return of the physicians to the West Bank.

Boycott: 'Half the Battle'

To the Editor:

Under Secretary of Commerce Jack A. Baker's March 30 letter is, in effect, the confession which the Anti-Defamation League has been awaiting from the Administration since the spring of last year. It was then we first charged the Federal Government with properly distinguishing between the anti-Jewish discrimination and the anti-Israel boycott in the United States. It has been A.D.L.'s position that both Arab activities are improper. One is a violation of American law, the other a violation of American foreign policy.

Until Mr. Baker's letter to you, the Administration had been fudging its position, allowing everyone to believe it was against both the anti-Jewish discrimination and the anti-Israel boycott. Now, finally, Mr. Baker admits that the Commerce Department has been fighting only half the battle, in that it refuses to speak out against the Arab boycott of Israel as it does against anti-Jewish discrimination.

We repeat what we have said on several times before. It is immoral for any Administration spokesman to urge that American businessmen be free to violate American anti-boycott policy simply because the law provides no penalty for the offense.

South Africa: A Case Against Integration

To the Editor:

In his March 25 letter, David Jessop suggested "pressure on South Africa to abandon apartheid and to achieve a racially integrated society" so that the West could legitimately come to Pretoria's aid if Pretoria were threatened by Communist guerrillas.

Mr. Jessop is apparently not abreast of the situation in South Africa, nor is he aware that the real problem facing Africa is the arbitrarily throwing together of ethnic communities within large, artificial boundaries.

The policy of political integration is therefore not acceptable to the masses of the major black nations, nor is it acceptable to the white. To quote only one example: At the last general election in the Transkei (homeland of the Xhosa-speaking nation) some 60 percent of the voters cast their secret ballot in favor of the party which supported separate development. In the 1972 Bophuthatswana general election—the first for the Tswana-speaking nation—the party which supports separate development received more than 71 percent of the popular vote. While some leaders of the major black groups talk integration, elections have so far shown that voters prefer separate development.

South Africa was the closest witness of the complete collapse of an attempt at this model of racial partnership—namely, the Central African Federation, formerly Northern Rhodesia, Southern Rhodesia and Nyasaland—to establish a one-man/one-vote, multi-racial social system and parliament (along the lines advocated for South Africa by the Afro-Asian world and a considerable number of Western states).

Whoever tries to sell integration to black and white leaders in South Africa will first have to prove that the Central African Federation never existed, nor India, Pakistan and Bangladesh, Scandinavia, Malaysia—nor even the whole of Europe for that matter.

The eight black nations in South Africa are now in an intermediate stage of constitutional development. They will eventually become separate sovereign states like Lesotho—enclaved by the Republic of South Africa but like any other independent African state. During October of this year another independent African state will come into being, namely the Transkei, the first of the homelands to do so.

Of Palestine and History

To the Editor:

Gil Robinov's March 23 letter is an attempt at distortion of history. It is not my intention to defend President Sadat and his policies, but it is interesting to consider the retaining of the fields and two strategic passes "a bad deal for Sadat."

It would benefit Mr. Robinov to read some history books to find out to whom these oil fields and passes belong and who occupied and now occupies Arab territories. History will inform Mr. Robinov how Israel was created and how the Palestinians were uprooted and expelled from their homeland. Compared to the staggering American military and economic aid to Israel, supplying Sadat with transport planes seems trifling.

Mr. Robinov, it would appear, is a victim of his own propaganda.

Ian Smith's 'Self-Delusion'

To the Editor:

Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith presents the world with a demonstration of man's capacity for self-delusion unequaled since King Canute.

To accuse the West of "an incredible sort of stupidity" when, for years, it has refused to recognize the inevitable demise of white supremacy in southern Africa depicts dramatic irony at an unparalleled level. Unfortunately, Smith's resolution to "stand up and fight if necessary" completes the analogy. Like Lear, the Prime Minister's refusal to see reality is destined to result in unspeakable tragedy. BIG WIN BY FRANCE'S COMMIES DROPS FRANC AND OTHER SHOE

Socialists In, Too— Tensions Escalate As You Read

By James Goldsborough

Special to the Op-Ed page

PARIS—What would happen if Henry A. Kissinger's fears came true and the Communist Party in France or Italy was voted into power? For argument, assume it is France and that the Communists and their Socialist allies win a majority in the next legislative elections. There

'News' would be an immediate

Analysis constitutional crisis, for the Fifth Republic Constitution makes no provision for a President and National Assembly of opposing tendencies.

President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing would have four options: calling new elections; resigning and holding a new Presidential election; naming his own Government, which would surely be refused by the Assembly; and calling on Socialist leader François Mitterrand to form a leftist Government.

Believing in the will of the people, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing names Mr. Mitterrand Prime Minister, who in turn appoints Communist leader Georges Marchais Labor Minister. The Government is composed of 11 Socialists, six Communists, five Gaullists and three nonpolitical technocrats, including two women.

There are immediate problems to face. The franc, under attack since the pre-election polls, has collapsed. The Bank of France ceases to support it and it floats downward as industry, investors and hoarders fight to get their money out of the country. Special border brigades are set up to prevent the flight of capital. Ordinances are enacted providing penalties for profiteering, black marketing, speculation, price increases and capital export.

By this time, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing has gone on television, with Mr. Mitterrand, to announce a program of "change with continuity." He appeals for calm and proclaims that the age-old division of France into right and left, workers and bourgeoisie, has ended. France is united, announces the President.

Mr. Marchais also is appearing frequently on television to make up for past absences. He urges a "union of all democrats," warning, however, that Socialist gains are irreversible and that the worst enemy of the revolution—even a peaceful one—is reaction.

The behavior of labor is exemplary, except for some maneuvering by the Confédération Générale du Travail, the Communist-led union, to move into the non-Communist labor territory on the ground that labor owes its past weaknesses to its divisions. There are no strikes. Mr. Marchais points out that with Government and industry being taken over by the people they would be strikes against themselves.

The Government has been meeting daily in a crisis atmosphere to debate the application of the left's common program for Government. Mr. Marchais reminds everyone that the program calls for nationalization of all heavy industry, including the auto, steel, oil, chemical, electronics, pharmaceutical, aeronautical, mining, transportation and textile industries.

Prime Minister Mitterrand, however, is unusually reticent, having noted that nationalized industry in other European countries has not been doing well. There is a first public sign of Socialist-Communist tension.

A compromise is finally reached. The Government will take only minority control, in the beginning, in the automobile and steel sectors. A 15 billion franc loan will be floated to finance the nationalizations.

In Brussels, meanwhile, Gaston Defferre, France's Socialist Foreign Minister, has been meeting nonstop with France's partners and allies to explain Government policy. There will be no changes regarding the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, at least not for the present, he announces.

The United States Ambassador to NATO asks whether it is appropriate to have Communists in the Government of a member of an anti-Communist alliance and is told that Portugal created the precedent. The envoy replies that France is not Portugal, and there is general agreement.

Across town at European Economic Community headquarters, Commission President Christopher Soames points out that in the current round of trade negotiations the United States has raised the question of compensation for several nationalized companies in which United States companies have an interest.

The worst happens back in Paris. Michel Rocard, the Socialist Finance Minister, has used a news conference to accuse the United States, through manipulation of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, of "the same tactics they used in Chile."

Mr. Rocard's accusations, immediately denied in Washington, are backed up by figures showing that I.M.F. swap loan credits are being denied to France.

More seriously, Mr. Rocard, who has personally supervised the common program's nationalizations of private banks, charges that commercial bank credit to France has dried up. Except for its gold, France is out of reserves, he reports.

With the situation rapidly deteriorating, Mr. Mitterrand, with Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's approval, announces on television that the Government has revised its program of nationalizations.

The Government will take over only Dassault and the Compagnie Française des Pétroles. This about-face is too much for the Communists, who call for a general strike. Mr. Marchais warns the police not to interfere.

Meanwhile, a Government crisis has broken out in Italy, where the Socialists have left their coalition with the Christian Democrats. Communist leader Enrico Berlinguer calls for national elections, and points out that the Italian party, unlike France's, does not believe in nationalizations. It will be different in Italy, he tells the people.

There's No Left Left

By William Safire

WASHINGTON, April 7—When Gertrude Stein bleakly surveyed Oakland, Calif., she announced: "There's no there there." In the same way, the results of the primary elections in New York and Wisconsin this week lead to this conclusion: "There's no Left left."

Most of the aging "New Left" has dropped out of politics; the remainder has joined much of the Old Left in the exodus to the New Right. Think of it: An articulate, attractive candidate like Congressman Udall, taking on Wisconsin's favorite label of "progressive," campaigning hard for many months, receiving help from Humphrey men who wanted to stop Carter, winds up with a third of the Democratic votes against a field generally perceived as conservative.

The message is unmistakable: The McGovernite left of the Democratic Party, so recently in the saddle, is hardly in the stable. Ideologically, the Americans for Democratic Action is down, and the Coalition for a Democratic Majority is up.

But what of the strong Udall showing in New York, where he ran a respectable second behind Senator Jackson, while Jimmy Carter was limping in fourth, behind Nobody? Doesn't that show that there is still a Left left?

Sorry: Nothing more vividly illustrates the rightward march than the Jackson victory in New York. Four years ago, a supporter of a strong defense posture would have been laughed out of a Democratic race. Jackson's win cannot be solely due to his support of Israel: He won in Elmira and in Spanish Harlem, and swept Queens County, which is more Catholic than Jewish.

New Yorkers kept Udall alive as a Vice-Presidential possibility, even as they gave Mr. Carter the worst trouncing he has suffered. But "strong showings" do not a candidacy make; in Wisconsin, Governor Reagan captured 44 percent of the vote, and it is interpreted as "pretty good, considering." In truth, had the Reagan forces in Wisconsin been better organized months ago, a stunning upset might well have been engineered. Because Mr. Reagan wrote off Wisconsin from the start, he was unable to extend his one-primary winning streak.

Wisconsin may have been the most important primary so far. Governor Reagan played it safe, pleading poverty, but it was not so much a shortage of funds as a shortage of nerve that initially kept him from making his best efforts there. Had he gambled and lost, he could have shrugged it off; had he played to win, as challengers must, he might have turned around 5 percent of the vote and headed South and West with all the momentum.

Wisconsin's Democratic squeaker killed any remote Udall chances for the top spot and virtually ensured Mr. Carter a place somewhere on the Democratic ticket. Unlike Reagan, Carter took his chances; the daring paid off with one of those moments that will be looked back upon as a turning point in a campaign.

If Mr. Carter had lost in Wisconsin, on the same day of his drubbing in New York, he could have been said to have been "stopped"; at least, during the hot-stove-league weeks ahead, he would have taken an analytical beating.

Not only did he win, but he won in such a way as to produce one of those classic we-showed-'em photos: The picture of the political year to date is of Jimmy Carter holding aloft the headline of a newspaper prematurely giving victory to his opponent, recalling the jubilant moment of Harry Truman's upset over Thomas E. Dewey.

With this last note reverberating through the forthcoming intermission, delegates may get the idea that Mr. Carter has an asset they consider more important than intelligence, stamina, character, integrity or charisma: It could be that he's lucky. Of the last four Presidential elections, two were the biggest landslides and two were the closest squeakers—and in a squeaker, convention delegates reason, it helps to have luck.

Here in Washington, trendier Democrats—particularly the old Kennedy crowd—are gravitating toward Mr. Carter, sensing in him the cool opportunism and apparent outsider's malleability that they find so attractive. (White House joke: Why can't Jimmy Carter lie? Because when he lies, he grows another tooth.)

The reaction to Carter in power-brokerage offices and in Georgetown recalls the legend of Napoleon's return from Elba as it was supposedly reported in Paris newspapers. "Hated Beast Lands in South" was the first headline; a more cautious "Napoleon Advances" was the second; finally, "Beloved Emperor at Gates of Paris."

At this moment the message from Wisconsin has generated a "Napoleon advances" feeling here about Mr. Carter. Meanwhile, the message from New York is that there are some Democrats—perhaps what's left of the Left—who might even stay home rather than vote for the supremely confident man from Georgia.

By John Keats

Biomedical engineers at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Johnson Space Center, Houston, are working on a project they call "meal systems for the elderly." They rightly believe that old people who live alone do not prepare proper meals. But, the space scientists say, plastic packages of astronauts' food could be mailed, parcel post, to lonely old men and women. Each package would contain a meal that would provide one-third of the daily dietary allowance necessary to the elderly—food they could easily open and eat without preparation, and with no dishes to wash.

A Space Center report said this is all quite feasible, that the Apollo crew "had a wide range of food items from which to select their daily mission menu." The astronauts "enjoyed" more than seventy items, the report said; balanced meals for five days were packed "in man-per-day overwraps."

A typical meal, in a plastic bag, consisted of chicken and vegetables. Water was injected into the bag, which the astronaut then kneaded in his hands for three minutes. He then cut off the neck of the bag, put it in his mouth, and squeezed—and thus enjoyed a palatable and nourishing main course.

Other meals consisted of shrimp cocktail, turkey and gravy, beef and potatoes, sausage patties, spaghetti and meat sauce, pork and scalloped potatoes, beef stew, frankfurters, and chicken and rice. It was all "freeze-dried rehydratable, wet-pack" nourishment. For the elderly, the NASA scientists are thinking in terms of a package containing "a twenty-one-day menu cycle to provide variety from a list of ten entrees; twenty side dishes, ten desserts and five beverages."

I find the tunnel vision of the NASA people to be as repellent and as inhuman as their lugubrious language. I am familiar with the workings of the food engineer's mind, and I wouldn't be a bit surprised if NASA's add-water-knead-and-squeeze daily mission menus contained wholly synthetic ingredients.

I have no doubt that their engineered food is nourishing insofar as the body is concerned. I do doubt that it would be nourishing in any other way, and I also doubt that the astronauts "enjoyed" what they had to squeeze into their mouths, or that they thought of it as food.

NASA's new project is certainly well-intended, but it strikes me as being just another example of scientific bureaucracy's frequently misplaced enthusiasms, because there is nothing about it that is in any way humane.

For example, the project is first of all based on the dubious assumption that the post office is efficient. But more important, it is also predicated on the belief that palsied, arthritic hands are as deft and cunning as the hands of astronauts. No one at NASA may have envisioned trembling fingers fumbling with plastic packages, or shaking hands trying to direct the neck of a squelching bag of gruel toward the mouth.

God knows that when I become an old man, I do not want to live alone in an apartment and receive in the mail a box of plastic bags packed in man-per-day overwraps that will enable me to fulfill my daily mission menu requirements, particularly when the only daily mission left to me will be to wait for death in silence.

I believe that old people need company more than they need systems. I believe that there is much more to food than nourishment, and much more to a meal than the food. I believe that old people, like all other people, need to eat food prepared by loving hands, and that they need to eat it in communion with friends, even if the food be only bread broken into a bowl of wine.

John Keats is author of the forthcoming book, "What Ever Happened to Mom's Apple Pie?"

On April 10, 1975, we called attention to a "Forgotten Anniversary." Unfortunately, most of what we said remains all too timely today. In fact, some of the problems we talked about then have worsened. During the week ending March 12, 1976, for example, daily oil import rates amounted to just under 50% of average U.S. daily needs. Import levels fluctuate, but the trend is obvious and ominous: In 1970, imports accounted for 23% of U.S. demand; in 1971, 26%; 1972, 30%; 1973, 36%; 1974, 37%; and 1975, 38%.

Forgotten Anniversary

America passed a milestone anniversary last month. But hardly anybody noticed.

On March 18, 1974, the Arabs lifted their oil embargo against the United States, and loosened their six-month stranglehold on America's lifestyle. Not since Colonial days had this country been so much at the mercy of foreign powers.

When the embargo ended, Americans thought they had learned a lesson. Great resolutions were heard in the land, and clarion calls like Project Independence were nurtured by mighty hyperbole.

Now, more than a year has gone by. Frankly, very little has been accomplished to reduce America's dependence on costly, insecure foreign oil.

In terms of good news and bad, the box score would look like this:

First, the good news—

- Congress and the Administration are at least talking—although wrangling might be a better word—about America's long-term energy needs. So are an assortment of foundations and study groups. Eventually, a consensus might emerge.
- The weather cooperated. The winter was mild. Even though the natural gas shortage got worse, America muddled through without any massive industrial shutdowns due to a lack of gas.
- Most people now recognize the importance of drilling offshore, in the Outer Continental Shelf, for a secure supply of domestic oil. The Supreme Court has clarified that the federal government, not the states, owns the Shelf.

Now, the bad news—

- America is still importing about six million barrels of oil a day, or almost 40 percent of our requirements.
- Congressional emphasis so far, in its energy discussions, has been almost exclusively on cutting demand. Measures to boost domestic supply largely have been neglected.
- There still isn't a single oil or gas well in the U.S. Atlantic, and the Interior Department's timetable for an Atlantic lease sale was delayed pending the Supreme Court ruling. Furthermore, Congress seems intent on mandating further delays, by extending the powers of the governors. And through schemes calling for exploration by the federal government before bids are requested from industry. There are even proposals to create a federal oil and gas company to work the choice offshore areas (when it gets around to them).
- In the face of the worsening natural gas shortage, Congress persists in retaining price controls on this fuel. It is considering tighter controls, even though present regulations have all but destroyed economic incentive to invest in gas exploration.
- Speaking of disincentive, Congress hacked away at the oil industry's ability to attract the massive amounts of capital it needs by increasing its tax burden. Just when profits were declining.

If you think the bad news outweighs the good, you're right. Isn't it time to remember the lesson of the boycott? And take a few sensible actions for a change.

SCHOOL DISTRICT DISPUTES ANKER

Principals on West Side Told to Restore Full Schedule Despite Board's Warning

By LEONARD BUDER

Despite a warning of possible disciplinary action from School Chancellor Irving Anker, the local board of a West Side school district ordered its schools yesterday to restore a full instructional day for pupils.

Hector M. Aponte, the chairman of the board, said the principals in District 3 had been directed, effective this Monday, to restore the 90 minutes of weekly instructional time that had been cut from school programs recently under earlier pressures from Chancellor Anker.

He said that the only exceptions permitted would be those, involving perhaps a half-dozen schools, where the restoration might disrupt current school activities.

The district, which covers the area from West 59th Street to roughly 122d Street, has 23 elementary and junior high schools with a total enrollment of 17,000 pupils.

Mr. Aponte made the announcement at a morning news conference, attended by local officials, community representatives, parents and others, held at Public School 84, at 2 West 92d Street. The school is one of nine in the district where parents have been peacefully sitting in, in some instances for more than a month, to demonstrate support for a full school day for their children.

After the announcement, Mr. Aponte said later, he received a telephone call from Mr. Anker warning that if the board persisted it would be superseded and the principals would be told directly by central headquarters to comply with the citywide policy on the shortened school day. A central board spokesman said Mr. Anker had spoken to Mr. Aponte and had mentioned the "possibility" of supersession.

Mr. Aponte said that his board would not bow to the Chancellor's threat. He said the board voted last Wednesday to return to a full school day and to a full schedule of preparation periods for teachers because the district could do so and still stay within the budget granted to it by the central board.

Chancellor's Authority At Issue

But Robert H. Terte, a spokesman for the central board, said the issue was not whether the district was within or could stay within its budget, but whether the Chancellor had the authority to enforce uniform citywide educational policies. He added that the state courts had upheld the Chancellor's authority in a suit brought by local school boards to overturn the reduction in school time.

Last fall, as part of the settlement that ended the five-day teachers' strike, the board of education directed the city's 32 school districts to shorten their instructional days by 45 minutes twice a week. The schools were told to use this time, when pupils were not present, for preparation or free periods for teachers. The settlement also provided for a cut in the number of free periods that most teachers received.

When a number of districts balked at complying with the directives—among them District 3—Chancellor Anker temporarily superseded the local boards and brought about compliance by the principals. In district 3, however, the compliance proved short-lived. Last Friday, six schools in apparent anticipation of yesterday's announcement by the district, reopened full school days.

SCHOOLS IN MERIDEN CLOSED BY WALKOUT

Special to The New York Times

MERIDEN, Conn., April 7—About 600 teachers went on strike here today, closing the 14 schools and giving 10,500 students an unexpected holiday.

The teachers failed to show up for work because the Court of Common Council voted magnimously on Monday to reject a two-year contract with the teachers calling for a $300 across-the-board raise and a dental-insurance plan.

The annual base salary now for teachers in this central Connecticut town is $8,200. Members of the council had said the city did not have enough money to pay for the settlement, which was agreed upon by the Board of Education.

Superintendent William Patallo said that the schools opened for about 20 minutes this morning, but that students were sent home when only 14 teachers crossed picket lines. There were no incidents.

Mr. Patallo said there would be no school on Thursday.

Thomas Bruenn, president of the Meriden Federation of Teachers, said: "We're ready to go to jail rather than to go back to work without a contract. In order to save the state money, we'll even drive ourselves to jail."

legal pressure but rather "because of the times we're living in." So when one of their ball boys passed his 19th birthday late last season, they "graduated" him and decided to look for a girl as a replacement. It was no great problem finding one, because girls had been writing to the team for years applying for jobs.

"We need three or four girls as a reserve in order to place one on the field each game," said James K. Thomson, vice president in charge of the stadium operations. "That's because they have to go to school and they're not always available. So we instructed Herb Norman, who runs our clubhouses, to interview some girls on the list of applicants and then pick three or four, if we went ahead with the idea."

They went ahead with it, all right, and even held private "tryouts" in Shea Stadium while the team was training in Florida—teaching the girls how to handle the job and seeing if they had the "arms" for throwing the ball maybe 150 feet to the dugout.

"The only problem now," Mr. Thomson said, sounding like a man who had steered a tricky course through a dangerous channel, "is that we're still waiting for their uniforms to come in from Massachusetts. If they don't arrive by tomorrow, we'll have to delay the girls' debut. What the public will see on the field after that is the usual number of young people helping the umpires and the coaches—two bat boys and two ball persons, I guess you'd call them."

The girls will receive the same hourly pay as the boys, meaning that for one shift of about four hours, they will go home with $8 or $9. But they will be chaperoned, and a place will be found as their dressing quarters, perhaps the football locker room that was used as a clubhouse by the Yankees, now returning to their modernized Yankee Stadium after two years of camping out in Shea.

The Mets are not exactly pioneers in ball-girl casting, though they did hire the first woman umpire, Bernice Gera, for their front-office staff in community relations.

The Oakland A's have employed girls to chase foul balls for several years, including the three years they appeared on national television in the World Series. The Philadelphia Phillies also have a ball girl, and the Baltimore Orioles gave their ball girl double duty: retrieving foul balls and also dusting off the bases (and the coaches' shoes) during the fifth-inning sweeping of the infield.

The Yankees, meanwhile, will join the baseball "revolution" this season with historic flourishes of their own. After playing their first five games in Milwaukee and Baltimore, they will return next Thursday to the Bronx and to the stadium they opened 53 years ago when Babe Ruth ruled the roost.

Now the city owns the stadium and is paying between $50 million and $100 million to modernize it. When the Yankees play their "home opener" against the Minnesota Twins, it will cost $1.50 for general admission and $5.50 for a lower box seat—although the team announced yesterday that the ball park was sold out, anyway.

In Cincinnati, the Reds' stadium has been sold out for three weeks, and standing-room tickets were going for $3 for today's National League opener. The Reds have been allowed to start the season ahead of other teams because they have been endowed with tradition: They fielded the first professional baseball team in 1869 and, 40 years later, President William Howard Taft liked to "go home" from Washington and throw out the first ball.

Now the championship flag flies over Riverfront Stadium, and the first ball will be pitched to Johnny Bench today by Louis Nippert, chairman of the Reds' board of directors.

Behind all the customary razzle-dazzle of baseball's return, though, expensive new struggles were being waged for the customer's time and money. In the 100th year of the National League and the 75th of the American, the "national pastime" finds itself surrounded by playoffs in basketball and hockey, by talent-selection drafts in football, by weekly golf tournaments on television and by $250,000 purses in horse racing and tennis.

Era of Free Agent

As if all that were not trouble enough, baseball also finds itself entering the era of the free agent—the player who can sell himself in the open market. Last year it was Catfish Hunter, winning his freedom on a technicality and cashing it for $3.75 million for five summers with the Yankees. This year it was Andy Messersmith, winning his freedom on a broader ruling that toppled the game's "reserve system" of controlling players until they were traded or retired.

While the courts deliberated and the negotiators argued, the training camps stayed shut this spring until they were finally opened March 18 by order of the commissioner, Bowie Kuhn.

By then, all of the exercising time and almost half of the exhibition schedule had been wiped out, and the state of Florida was losing $1 million a day in revenue generated by baseball. And since opening day in 1975, about 100 of the 600 players in the two major leagues have been traded and 12 of the 24 managers dismissed.

Here and there, the fans enjoy a throwback to the old days. The "Green Monster" wall in Fenway Park still stands in left field, inviting the hitters to aim high. Walter Alston still manages the Dodgers in Los Angeles, working on his 23d consecutive one-year contract. Bill Veeck is back, and so is the grass in Comiskey Park in Chicago, natural green grass replacing the artificial turf.

But otherwise, opening day of the season strikes more and more fans as opening day of the revolution—complete with free agents, tax shelters, municipal bond issues, played-out options and "ball persons" chasing the fouls down the line at Shea Stadium.

'Sign Man' at Shea Set to Toss Curves

By FRED FERRETTI

"I've always been zinging them, way back to 1965, then as the years went by I became mellow," the Sign Man said. "But this spring I decided they weren't doing anything and weren't going anywhere, so I decided to get nasty."

Thus Karl K. Ehrhardt—who can usually be found behind third base in Box 72E at Shea Stadium during Mets games, wearing his black, red and blue-banded derby and raising signs alternately lauding and chastising his beloved Mets—began making his signs at the beginning of spring training.

He prefers day-glow red and chartreuse, and because "I want to lean on Seaver a bit," he worked up "Hail Seaver," "Greedy Bum," and "We Come to Bury Seaver."

Though he was reluctant to use the latter, he was going to use it tomorrow at Shea—that is, until the Mets star pitcher signed his contract, and then the Sign Man quickly dashed off "Seaver Live$," and this is what he will raise high.

Snubbed by Seaver

The Sign Man, although he thinks Tom Seaver is the best pitcher in baseball, doesn't like him too much, ever since the pitcher snubbed him after a game. "For years," he said, "I'm giving him accolades, then I meet him, and he looks at me as if I crawled out from under a rock. He's a stiff."

The Sign Man thinks that the Mets, as a team, are rather stiff this year, although he remains loyal to them. The new manager, Joe Frazier, "is going to lean on the team this year," the Sign Man said, "and I think that's good. Yogi was too wishy-washy."

He has a sign made up for the manager—originally concocted for Joe DiMaggio at an old-timers game—that reads, "Greatest Joe on Earth," but he said that "Frazier will have to earn it."

The New York Times/Robert Walker

Karl K. Ehrhardt displaying his opening day sign

As for the Mets themselves, "I have to do my best to stir them up," he said, "even though I know they're not going anywhere. You know everybody thinks the Mets pay me for doing this. If they did, do you think I could do what I do? I get the knife out too much."

He has, for example, a sign ready for the Mets' first night game that is a commentary on the team—"Night of the Living Dead."

The Sign Man, who designs graphic ads for American Home Foods—for products such as Guldens Mustard, Franklin Nuts and Chef Boy-ar-dee—has been a baseball fan "forever."

Once a Dodger Fan

"As a matter of fact," he said, "I started taking my wife, Lucille, to Ebbets Field before we were married."

He was a Dodger fan, and remained so even after the Dodgers went to Los Angeles—at least for a while, "when they still had the Duke, Gilliam, Koufax and Drysdale."

"When they all left, I went for the Mets," he continued. "The Yankees? I sometimes go to the Stadium just to root against them. They're all stiffs."

Out in his garage in Glen Oaks, Queens, the 51-year-old graphic artist has a file of 650 signs that he has made up over the years.

"The day before a game I take out a pile and line them up in front of me," he said. "Then I figure out which fit the way the team is going. I take about 60 with me, then when I park in the gas station behind Shea, I make my final selection."

His wife and his son, Richard, have less enthusiasm for the signs than he does, he said, even upbeat ones like "Loopenark the Great," which is Kranepool spelled backwards, but "they humor me."

For tomorrow, he has taken a vacation day, and he will be in Box 72E "spieling and telling them what I think—after all, I'm not out there to win popularity contests."

The Major Events of the Day

International

The Chinese leadership, moving in a deteriorating political situation, deposed Deputy Prime Minister Teng Hsiao-ping and appointed Hua Kuo-feng as Prime Minister of China and First Deputy Chairman of the Communist Party. Mr. Hua thus emerged from China's power struggle as the leading potential successor to 82-year-old Chairman Mao Tse-tung. Young people were driven through the streets of Peking in trucks, beating drums and cymbals in celebration. But strict security measures were still evident around the square where rioting acted as a catalyst for the political shake-up. [Page 1, Columns 6-8.]

Analysts in Washington and Hong Kong saw Mr. Hua's sudden elevation as an attempt at compromise rather than a clear-cut victory for the so-called "radical" faction that led the campaign against Mr. Teng. Mr. Hua was aligned with none of China's rival factions in a decade of struggles. [1:6-7.]

President Ford told Congressional leaders that the $2.2 billion in aid to Israel in the current fiscal year and the $1.8 billion proposed for 1977 were adequate for it to maintain its security. He said he would veto efforts for a $500 million increase this year. This could lead to another confrontation with Israel's supporters in Congress. [1:5.]

Scientists have begun to take seriously after years of ridicule the reports of a Loch Ness monster in the depths of the Scottish lake. Recent publications from institutions such as Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology treat last summer's evidence as plausible. The director of Harvard's Museum of Comparative Zoology has urged an intensive search. [1:3-5.]

National

The three principal contenders for the Democratic Presidential nomination converged on Pennsylvania to prepare for that state's April 27 primary, which could prove the most important of the campaign so far. Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona, Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington and former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia all claimed victory as they interpreted the results in New York's and Wisconsin's primaries, but impartial Democrats felt that all three had been hurt by falling short of their declared goals. [1:1.]

Mr. Carter won three votes for every two gained by Mr. Udall among Wisconsin Republicans who chose to vote in the Democratic primary. They may have given him his narrow edge over Mr. Udall, judging from voter responses in The New York Times/CBS News poll. On issues, the surveys in Wisconsin and New York suggest that Mr. Udall had prevailed among Democratic liberals, and that Mr. Carter and Mr. Jackson are battling for command of the center-right constituency. [1:2.]

Knowledgeable associates of the late Howard Hughes, the eccentric billionaire, are increasingly doubtful that he left a will. It was long assumed that he had signed a will giving his estate to the nonprofit Howard Hughes Medical Institute. A Federal tax expert said more than three-quarters of the estate would go for Federal taxes if no will had been left. [1:6-7.]

The Ford Administration has decided against recommending legislation to let cable television compete against over-the-air broadcasts. Administration officials said this followed a series of meetings with those whom changes in the present law would affect, including the networks, cable operators, movie makers and sports groups. [1:6-8.]

Metropolitan

The Bank of America agreed in principle to buy $100 million in short-term New York State notes for its own portfolio this spring. The decision by the country's biggest bank gave a major boost to the state's effort to meet its critical financing needs. The negotiations had been watched closely by executives of most major banks, all of which have been asked for assistance. The state's "spring borrowing goal" is $4 billion. The executive vice president of the Bank of America said it was taking part both because it found the investment credit-worthy and because of the long-range public benefits of having New York State financially healthy. [1:4.]

Construction of Jamaica Mall, a $31.6 million shopping center in the heart of the blighted Jamaica business district in Queens, will begin late this year. City officials and community leaders envision this as the first major step to revive this once-flourishing hub of commerce. Mayor Beame said it would help start a wide range of activities helping both the public and private sectors of the city. [1:3.]

Mary Margaret McBride Of Radio Talk Show Dies

By ALBIN KREBS

Mary Margaret McBride, whose homey network radio programs delighted millions of American housewives five days a week for more than 20 years, died yesterday at her country home in West Shokun, N. Y., after a long illness.

Miss McBride, who was 76 years old, retired from network radio in 1954 and gave up her New York apartment in favor of her Catskills Mountains home, a converted barn about 100 miles north of the city. Until a few months ago, she conducted from her livin room a thrice-weekly program on station WGHO in Kingston, not far from her home.

Mary Margaret—that's what everyone called her; not Mary, and not Miss McBride, but Mary Margaret—was a super saleswoman in radio's heyday. Sponsors begged her to carry their messages in her breathy, homespun style, but she accepted only the products she tried and liked, and, being a teetotaler since the age of 4, when she took the temperance pledge, she drew the line at liquor advertising. She also disapproved of cigarette smoking, so that was another Mary Margaret product taboo.

Miss McBride, an amply proportioned woman with a hearty, sentimental approach to life, larded her programs with recipes for invariably weight-gaining dishes. When she spoke of food, her listeners, many of whom considered her one of the family — a favorite aunt, perhaps, or a cousin—could depend on their Mary Margaret to fairly drool with pleasure.

Lyrical Radio Repasts

To bring realism to her program, she said, she liked to actually eat several courses while on the air, always, of course, paying tribute to her sponsors' products. At the close of some of her radio repasts, Mary Margaret's description of a meal could take on fairly lyrical qualities.

"If I had to eat the same meal every day for the rest of my life," she said during one program, "this is what I'd choose, fixed the way my mother did it: delicate buttermilk biscuits so hot you can't pick them up, with butter slathered on their delicate insides; mashed potatoes that have been hand-beaten with cream and butter until they are fluffy as a cloud; baby chicken fried to crisp brownness; and, to finish off with, hot apple dumplings, rich with cinnamon, butter and brown sugar, and thick yellow cream to pour over . . . There would also be pickled peaches in thick syrup, grape jelly, spiced gooseberries, and pear and cherry preserves."

In addition to her gastronomical flights, Miss McBride offered her listeners, mostly women who took time out for 45 minutes each weekday at 1 P.M. from the drudgery of dishes and diapers to tune her in, interviews with a wide assortment of people.

Besides well-known personalities such as Eleanor Roosevelt, President Harry S. Truman and Jimmy Durante, Miss McBride liked to bring on zookeepers, plumbers, interior decorators, businessmen, almost anyone she thought might prove interesting.

Although she was from a long line of Southern Baptists who took a conservative view of tobacco, alcohol and sex, Mary Margaret had a keen eye and a keener ear for subjects that would captivate her devoted audience.

And so, on one occasion, to the dismay of her network and her sponsors, she invited Sally Rand, the fan dancer, to drop in on the program. It turned out there was nothing to worry about. Good, comforting, down-home-folks Mary Margaret skipped over Miss Rand's theatrical calling and elicited from her a touching memoir of her poverty-stricken childhood in the Ozark Mountains.

'Female Arthur Godfrey'

Such was Miss McBride's influence that she received at least 1,000 letters a week, and when she talked about a controversial book or play, a week's mail could run up to 5,000 pieces.

Occasionally, following a misunderstanding with a sponsor, she would just let slip on the air how she had been maltreated, and the offending soupmaker or baker or meatpacker would be bombarded by mail reproving him for hurting "poor Mary Margaret."

Miss McBride was referred to some years ago as "the female Arthur Godfrey." He, too, had an interview show over daytime radio, and in a way, the two of them pioneered the format of today's television talk shows.

Mary Margaret McBride was born Nov. 16, 1899, in tiny Paris, Mo., the daughter of Thomas Walker McBride and the former Elizabeth Craig. Mr. McBride was "a farmer with itchy feet, and no sooner would he get a rundown place in shape, then we'd move to another spread that needed fixing up," Miss McBride recalled some years ago.

Associated Press
Mary Margaret McBride

Mary Margaret's Great-Aunt Albina was wealthy and sent her to boarding school and the University of Missouri, with the understanding that Miss McBride would become associated eventually with a boarding school endowed by the great-aunt.

Went Into Magazine Writing

But after a year of college, Miss McBride told Great-Aunt Albina she intended to become a writer. The old relative's money stopped, and Mary Margaret had to take a part-time job on a newspaper in Columbia, Mo., earning $10 a week, until finally she received a degree.

In 1920, after she had worked briefly for The Cleveland Press, Miss McBride came to New York, where she was a reporter on The Evening Mail. In the following decade, she branched out into magazine writing, for The Saturday Evening Post, Cosmopolitan and several other publications.

Miss McBride's first radio job with WOR, in 1934. For a couple of weeks she pretended, as ordered, to be a folksy grandmother telling stories and reading recipes, but in the middle of one program, she suddenly told her "live" audience: "Look, I'm not a grandma, nor a mother, nor am I married. Why don't I just be myself?"

Her listeners approved, and for six years, Miss McBride was a WOR fixture. Later she moved to the CBS radio network, but was uncomfortable in the 15-minue format given her, and eventually she switched to NBC, for the long stay that won her national fame.

To celebrate her 10th anniversary on the air, Mary Margaret's devoted fans packed the old Madison Square Garden on Eighth Avenue at 50th Street, and on the 15th anniversary, Yankee Stadium could barely accommodate her devoted followers.

The funeral service for Miss McBride will be private.

BACHNER—Lester R. He was a gentle, considerate, generous and very wise man. People came to him when they were troubled and they left him strengthened and reassured. From the time over 50 years ago when Beth Abraham Hospital was founded until this day, Lester Bachner brought all of these splendid qualities to our Board which he served with distinction as an officer and trustee. Beth Abraham Hospital developed into its present posture through his concern and commitment to the chronically ill of our community. In pursuit of our mutual ideals he constantly gave much and accepted nothing—just the grateful appreciation of those who were privileged to know and work with him. We have lost a wonderful friend. He leaves a beautiful memories that will inspire us to continue the good work to which he was so deeply committed. To his dear family we extend our thanks for sharing Lester Bachner with us and our deepest sympathy on our great loss.

Some cadets were released after having proved that they could produce the work on their own.

Faculty members teaching Electrical Engineering 304, a required course, had given the same assignment to the more than 800 cadets enrolled in the course's 15-student sections to complete on their own during the first two weeks of March.

Col. Harold Rhyne, deputy commandant of cadets and advisor to the honor committee, said that "it involved roughly 10 mathematical problems requiring the use of a computer and an essay question."

Faculty members grading the papers over the one-week spring vacation, which ended last Sunday, began to notice similarities in the "proof" sections of the mathematical answers, prompting a suspicion of unauthorized collaboration, Colonel Rhyne said.

They brought this to the attention of Academy officials, who turned the matter over to the 88-member committee charged with upholding the honor code: "A cadet will not lie, cheat or steal or tolerate those who do."

Cadet William Andesen and his designated successor as chairman of the honor committee, Cadet Michael Ivy, a junior who was among those who took the test, conferred with engineg department instructors on Sunday. The roundup of suspects began the next day.

A caller identifying himself as a cadet telephoned The New York Times last night, one of three to do so in the last two days, to say that they had been held incommunicado for up to 14 hours awaiting interrogation by the subcommittee teams.

Cadet Andersen, who will join the 101st Airborne Division at Fort Campbell, Ky., when he graduates this summer, denied this in part as he answered questions, surrounded by officers, in the courtyard of an administration building today.

"Some were held for up to eight or nine hours," he said, "but they had television, food and a place to do their homework." The questioning lasted until 3 or 4 A.M., he said.

Under the cadet honor system, the rapidly organized subcommittees are the equivalent of assistant district attroneys making preliminary investigations. A smaller executive staff of the honor committee, which reviewed the subcommittee's findings today, fills the role of the District Attorney. Cadet Andersen heads that panel.

The 12-member honor boards, which will begin hearing the suspected cadets and considering other evidence on Monday, function as grand juries. Cadets are permitted to resign or plead not guilty, if the equivalent of an indictment is returned. A single negative vote on an honor board results in dismissal of the charge.

Cadets seeking to challenge the implied guilty verdict of the honor board can appeal to five-member appeal boards of officers, whose action parallels that of the trial.

Cadet suspects are informed of their rights, as in civilian life, but are not likely to have an opportunity to consult military civilian counsel until well into the proceedings, a practice that has attracted some criticism.

The honor committee also has been charged in recent years with standing as a constant threat and thus a form of abuse and harassment for petty violations.

Cadets who had been exonerated by the appeal board of officers were punished nevertheless, on occasion, through the "silence," a form of shunning by other cadets, until 1973. Although outlawed then, the silence is nevertheless applied, usually without complete success, at the present time, according to some cadets.

Several neighbors reported seeing a stranger driving a car with Maryland license plates. They gave the license number to the Clarkstown police, and the car was traced to an employee at West Point who said he had lent the car to Cadet McNutt for the day.

Mr. Gribetz said that the Clarkstown police had found in Cadet McNutt's room a knife believed to have been used in the assault.

Cadet McNutt, who attended Howard High School in Columbia, Md., made the Army football team in his first year and became a starter at about midseason.

The West Point public information officer, Maj. Thomas Jones, said that Cadet McNutt would be placed on administrative leave during the court proceedings.

State Senate Returns to Its Place of Birth in Kingston

By IVER PETERSON
Special to The New York Times

KINGSTON, N.Y., April 7—The State Senate returned today to its birthplace here, where 199 years ago the first Senate gave New York its first government, its first constitution and its first governor.

Today, in the same squat limestone house that sheltered it then, the Senate gave New York its first official state fruit—the apple.

The official session lasted only a few minutes, but absorbed nearly a day of Bicentennial celebrations, prayers and speeches.

Forty-five of the 59 senators—there is one vacancy—assembled in this Hudson River city that became a refuge for the fledgling state government in 1777 as advancing British troops forced it to retreat, successively, from New York City to Fishkill, to Kingston, to Poughkeepsie and, after being scattered by the Redcoats, finally to Albany, where the Legislature resides in a massive and ornate Capitol today.

The problems that beset the Legislature in those days—there was an Assembly then, too, meeting in the Bogardus Tavern, but its members did not come today—bore some similarity to today's issues, as Orrin Lehman, Parks and Recreation Commissioner, pointed out in a brief luncheon speech to the Senators and local dignitaries.

"When the Senate first met here in Kingston," he said, "New York was a state in crisis. The government was pursued by a hostile force. Inflation stalked the land, and the state was having difficulty establishing its fiscal credibility."

New York City, he went on, as the audience began to titter, was isolated and the legislators were obsessed with the limitation of executive powers.

"It's comforting to review the progress we've made in 200 years of independence," he said to laughter.

Warnings and Petitions

On April 7, 1777, what was to become the State Senate was still called the Provincial Convention, and on that day its greatest concerns were drafting instructions to state delegates to the Continental Congress, then meeting in Philadelphia. It adjured them to agree to no Federal articles or plans for confederation that "may impliedly or expressly infringe the rights or jurisdiction of this state" and to protest the appointment of one Colonel Warner as commander of the state's revolutionary troops without the state's approval.

The Senators also heard a petition from a Catharine Clopper, protesting that "a young Negro slave and a Negro girl and sundry articles of furniture" were hers and not her father's, as Mr. Clopper had contended. A committee was appointed to study the claim.

There were protests recorded in the journal of that day from the people of Westchester County, too, who complained of the depredations of the British troops in their area. And there were protests by some of the citizens here today — earnest housewives campaigning in favor of curbs on abortions and protesting the killing of "Bicentennial babies," and a rabble of noisy but good-natured State University students, most of them from the campus at New Paltz, protesting tuition increases and cuts in state social services.

The dozen students chanted, "No taxation without representation," and seemed to bring out an awkward ambivalence among some of the more conservative lawmakers, who were celebrating the victory 200 years ago of a rude and unprepossessing band of revolutionaries against the established order.

"Of course, this country is one place they can do it," one Senator said, shaking his head at the noise. "Maybe in that sense it's all right."

"Maybe they'll get it out of their system," a colleague agreed.

In the brief session, the day's two bills were summarily passed—one establishing the Ulster County Development Agency, introduced by the day's host, Richard Schermerhorn, a Republican.

The other bill endorsed the apple as the official state fruit, adding it to the bluebird, the sugar maple, the garnet, the rose and the beaver on the list of New York's official flora, fauna and minerals. The Assembly is expected to pass the apple bill soon.

Inspector Colangelo said his men were not interested in consentual homosexuality.

Often, Inspector Colangelo said, the male prostitute is part of a team. "He cases the place while having sex, then sends up his accomplices to rip the victim off." Sometimes, he said, the male prostitute holds up the homosexual, threatening exposure if any complaints are filed. "The poor homosexuals are really at the mercy of these guys," the inspector said.

He said, too, that many of the male prostitutes used telephone-answering services that collect all the names of persons answering the advertisements, then use the names as the basis for widespread blackmail.

City Plan to Put Rinks on Ice Protested

By JOHN T. McQUISTON

Several hundred hockey players ranging in age from 5 to 19 rallied with their friends and parents in the Coney Island section of Brooklyn last night to protest against the city's plan to close, for the first time, its two indoor ice skating rinks for the spring, summer and fall months.

The rally was held at the Abe Stark Skating Rink, on the boardwalk at West 19th Street, one of the two facilities owned and operated by the city to be closed by the Parx Department because of the city's budget crisis. The other is the Flushing Meadow Park Rink in Queens.

"We'll have to cancel our spring training clinics," said Bart Grillo, the president of the Greater New York City Ice Hockey League, sponsor of the rally. The league is a nonprofit, volunteer organization that over the last 11 years has recruited more than 20,000 stick-hockey players from the city streets and introduced them to a new sport.

"To canel the clinics," Mr. Grillo said, "would eventually mean the end of the whole program."

"Without the cinics," he said, "there will be no chance to bring new youngsters into the program to learn the fundamentals. Without them they will never learn to skate."

More than 2,000 children have been paying $75 each a year, he said, to attend the clinics, which begin as early as 4 A.M. on weekend days and continue until the rinks open to the general public later in the morning. The league also sponsors 43 teams that compete throughout the northeast and Canada.

Mr. Grillo said the league had proposed to the Parks Department that it be allowed to take over operation of the rinks as part of the city's current program to recruit volunteers.

He said that the department had estimated that it would take nearly $10,000 a week to operate each of the two rinks. However, he said the league believed it could manage them for less—"about $10,000 a month"—and "Iturn a profit for the city."

"We can do it and not cost the city a penny," he said.

The young protesters filled the stands at the Abe Stark Rink and carried signs that read: "Abe Be Nice, Save Our Ice" and "Has the Big Apple Gone Rotten?"

Divorce Rate at a Peak

America's divorce rate in 1975 passed the million mark for the first time in history, says Ingrid Eisenstadter, executive director of Zero Population Growth. That figure represents an increase of about 50,000 over the previous year. Marriages declined during the same period.

Papa Pleads Guilty on State Charge

Vincent Papa Sr., a major figure in the so-called "French Connection" heroin theft of 398 pounds of narcotics from the Police Department property clerk's office, pleaded guilty yesterday to contempt and other charges after winning assurance from Justice Leonard H. Sandler of State Supreme Court that his prison sentence would run concurrently with a Federal prison term he is now serving. Mr. Papa is serving a 20-year sentence on a Federal narcotics conviction.

Wadsworth Hospital Agrees to Close

Wadsworth Hospital, a 50-bed private institution in Washington Heights that has been under pressure from state and Federal officials because of health and safety inadequacies, has agreed to close, according to Dr. J. Warren Toff, the State Health Department's associate commissioner for New York City affairs. Dr. Toff said he had received a letter from Ruth Grosz, acting administrator of the hospital, advising him of the hospital's decision. "We are picking up their license, probably tomorrow," said the state official. The hospital is at 629 West 185th Street. Dr. Toff called the closing a "breakthrough" for the state agency and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, which last month moved to withhold Government funds from the institution.

13-Week Strike Ends at Group Health

Clerical employees of Group Health Inc. ratified a three-year contract, ending a 13-week strike against the nonprofit health-insurance and health-service corporation. The 700 members of Local 153 of the Office and Professional Employees International Union will receive an immediate 10 percent wage increase, an increase of $14 a week next year and $15 in the third year of the contract. Present wages average $5.22 an hour.

The strike had delayed some payments for the three million people who receive medical, surgical and dental services from Group Health. A company spokesman said the new contract would not result in an increase in premiums.

U.S. Sues Smoked-Fish Company

The Federal Government has filed a civil suit charging a Brooklyn corporation that smokes fish with operating under unsanitary conditions that could lead to the presence of a "dangerous and frequently fatal substance." It identified the substance as Colostridium botulinum Type E toxin, which can cause respiratory paralysis. According to the complaint, filed in Federal Court in Brooklyn, the Nova Scotia Food Products Corporation of 77 Lombardy Street in the Greenpoint section, used improper temperatures, inadequate salting and poor storage in processing the fish despite warnings by the Federal Food and Drug Administration.

S.L.A. Ruling Perils Club Plans Of Restaurant in Trade Center

The scheduled Monday opening of a private luncheon club atop the North Tower of the World Trade Center was jeopardized yesterday when the State Liquor Authority ruled that the public must be admitted "to a substantial porion of the premises at all times" if a liquor license is granted.

The Port Authority of New York and New Jersey had planned to open the two-story restaurant to the public in the evening and restrict it to club members at lunch time. The club members, many of whom have signed up at $450 a year, are mostly businessmen with offices in or near the Trade Center.

Roger Martin, a spokesman for Inhilco, the Port Authority subsidiary that runs all the restaurants in the World Trade Center, said following the Liquor Authority's ruling that it was not certain whether the club could be opened Monday.

"We're meeting with them tomorrow," Mr. Martin said. "Everything depends on what happens then."

A spokesman for the Liquor Authority said that while Inhilco had expressed the intention of operating a private club on the 107th floor of the North Tower, it had applied for a restaurant license rather than a club license. Restaurant licenses must be open to the general public, the spokesman said.

Asked why several other restaurants in midtown were permitted to operate as private clubs at lunch time, the spokesman said that they had apparently applied for their licenses under false pretenses. "This ruling today may trigger further actions," he said, alluding to the other restaurants that operate part-time as private clubs.

Mr. Martin said the restaurant would be known as Windows on the World. He said that the entire operation had been scheduled to open next week, but that the public restaurant operation would not begin until mid-May, presumably barring further problems with the S.L.A.

The club operation has been a source of controversy since it was first announced some years ago. Critics have complained that public funds have been used to create and furnish the facility.

All Hail to 'All the President's Men'

By VINCENT CANBY

Newspapers and newspapermen have long been favorite subjects for movie makers—a surprising number of whom are former newspapermen, yet not until "All The President's Men," the riveting screen adaptation of the Watergate book by Carl Bernstein and Bob Woodward, has any film come remotely close to being an accurate picture of American journalism at its best.

"All The President's Men," directed by Alan J. Pakula, written by William Goldman and largely pushed into being by the continuing interest of one of its stars, Robert Redford, is a lot of things all at once: a spellbinding detective story about the work of the two Washington Post reporters who helped break the Watergate scandal, a breathless adventure that recalls the triumphs of Frank and Joe Hardy in that long-ago series of boys' books, and a vivid footnote to some contemporary American history that still boggles the mind.

The film, which opened yesterday at Loews Astor Plaza and Tower East Theaters, is an unequivocal smash-hit — the thinking man's "Jaws."

Much of the effectiveness of the movie, which could easily have become a mish-mash of names, dates and events, is in its point of view, which remains that of its two, as yet unknown reporters, Carl Bernstein (Dustin Hoffman), highly competitive and a little more experienced than his partner, and Bob Woodward (Robert Redford), very ambitious and a dog for details.

It's through their eyes—skeptical, hungry, insatiably curious—that "All The President's Men" unfolds. It begins logically on the night of June 17, 1972, when five men were arrested in an apparent break-in at the headquarters of the Democratic National Committee in the Watergate complex in Washington, and continues through the spectacular series of revelations, accusations and admissions of guilt that eventually brought the Nixon Presidency to its conclusion.

Like Bernstein and Woodward in the course of their investigation, the film maintains bifocal vision, becoming thoroughly absorbed in the seemingly unimportant minutiae out of which major conspiracies can sometimes be reconstructed, yet never for long losing sight of the overall relevance of what's going on. Although "All The President's Men" is first and foremost a fascinating newspaper film, the dimensions and implications of the Watergate story obviously give it an emotional punch that might be lacking if, say, Bernstein and Woodward had been exposing corruption in the Junior League.

Thus the necessity of the director's use of newsreel footage from time to time—the shots of President Nixon's helicopter making a night landing at the White House, which open the film; the television images of the President entering the House of Representatives, and of other familiar folk including former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, former Vice President Agnew, and, especially, Representative Gerald R. Ford in the course of his nomination of President Nixon at the 1972 Republican National Convention.

Though the film will undoubtedly have some political impact, its strength is the virtually day-by-day record of the way Bernstein and Woodward conducted their investigations, always under the supervision of a kindly avuncular Ben Bradlee (Jason Robards), The Post's managing editor who (in this film) gives out advice, caution and, occasionally, a "well-done," acting as Dr. Gillespie to their Dr. Kildares.

Mr. Redford and Mr. Hoffman play their roles with the low-keyed, understated efficiency required since they are, in effect, the straight men to the people and the events they are pursuing. The film stays out of their private lives but is full of unexpected, brief, moving glimpses into the private lives of their subjects, including a frightened bookkeeper (Jane Alexander) for the Committee to Re-elect the President, Donald Segretti (Robert Walden), the "dirty tricks" man, and Hugh Sloan Jr. (Stepehn Collins), the committee treasurer, and his wife (Meredith Baxter).

The manners and methods of big-city newspapering, beautifully detailed, contribute as much to the momentum of the film as the mystery that's being uncovered. Maybe even more, since the real excitement of "All The President's Men" is in watching two comparatively inexperienced reporters stumble onto the story of their lives and develop it triumphantly, against all odds.

Wings Tickets Selling Quickly

Thousands of youths poured through plywood-reinforced glass doors to Madison Square Garden box offices yesterday to buy tickets to Paul McCartney's first concert here in 10 years.

Libby Dykan, of Mount Vernon, N. Y., lost her shoes in the scuffle, but later happily displayed six tickets. Twenty-four police officers were on hand to keep order.

Mr. McCartney, left-handed bassist and composer with the dismantled Beatles, and his new band, Wings, will appear at the Garden on May 24 and 25 and at the Nassau Coliseum in Uniondale, L.I., May 21.

Stanley Fixler of Queens said he got on line at 3 A.M. yesterday "on speculation" and waited 12 hours before the doors were opened.

By 3 P.M. some of the youths were chanting impatiently, some young women were crying and some men and women had their clothing disarrayed. But they plunged into the Garden and bought up the tickets costing $8.50 to $10.50.

'Progressive' Country Music

By JOHN ROCKWELL

A slew of records has come out recently to deepen our notions of "progressive" country music and its antecedents. The term "progressive" country normally applies to a Texas-based Coterie around Willie Nelson and such Nashville-centered innovators as Waylon Jennings and Tompall Glaser.

Most of these artists cultivate a hippie-cowboy image and revert in their music to the rawer, folkish sort of country sound that was common 30 or 40 years ago.

The progressives go back to a Depression populism and homesickness after Okie treks and urban displacement. This is especially true of the Texas-Oklahoma axis of progressivism, the source of most of the new bunch of releases.

United Artists has a two-disk album out called "Texas Country." Like most single-label collections, this isn't so much a judicious survey as a spotty juxtaposition of artists who, the company hopes, can turn a profit. The selections here end with some of Bob Wills's last recordings; the age shows but the spirit is still very much there. Mr. Wills and his Texas Playboys were the founders of this whole scene, dating back to the easily swinging string bands that played for Okies from flatbed trucks in the 1930's.

Also included are the first records of Mr. Nelson and Freddy Fender, the Nelson with lusher arrangements and more conventional songs than we're used to today, but unmistakably his; the Fender even more unbashedly Tex-Mex rockabilly than at present. Some early sessions from the Asleep at the Wheel group, the young Wills-emulators who are now based in Texas themselves, fill out the album.

Willie Nelson's latest disk, "The Sound in Your Mind," on Columbia, is a collection of individual songs, unlike his recent concept albums. It doesn't seem one of Mr. Nelson's more distinctive efforts, for all its passing charms.

Merle Haggard may be the epitome, along with the fading Buck Owens, of Bakersfield Country. But his family went to California from Oklahoma during the Depression, and his strengths as a singer have always owed something to his roots. His most recent Capitol album, "It's All in the Movies," is a typically uneven collection of songs — the top country stars are far less concerned about consistency than comparable rock artists—but at its best, it reaffirms Mr. Haggard's status as one of the finest singers around.

Hoyt Axton, another native of Oklahoma, has never had the success his talents might seem to predestine him for. His new A & M disk, "Fearless," is a typically imaginative blend of country basics and literary innovation; Mr. Axton is really too good a singer and bandleader to avoid stardom for long.

Finally, we have James Talley, another Oklahoma native who harks back very deliberately both to his musical roots — he features Johnny Gimble, a wonderful violinist who used to play for Mr. Wills — and ideologically to his Depression antecedents.

GOING OUT Guide

A TOUCH OF CLASS The newest weekend entertainer in the Lincoln Center area is Peter Conway, a troubadour of sophisticated ballads. His partner is John Meyer at the piano in the Cafe du Center (799-2254), on Columbus Avenue at 67th Street.

This is a briskly friendly and informal place—a small, yellow-lighted room with tables. The bar is the center of conversational buzzing. Undaunted, Mr. Conway goes ahead, and sings and does it well. (After all, it was Saturday night.) He performs Friday and Saturday from 10:30 P.M. to 1:30 A.M., using no microphone, and standing in front of the piano.

Mr. Conway began with Gershwin's "Shall We Dance." Next, with the verse, came "I Can't Get Started With You"; the bridge was repeated with unfamiliar lyrics. Then he sang "It Might as Well Be Spring," a Gertrude Lawrence medley of "Lighthouse Blues," "Do, Do, Do" and "My Ship."

After a sprightly "From This Moment On," Mr. Conway did another Cole Porter tune, "Get Out of Town," then the Dietz-Schwartz "By Myself," verse included—a rarity—and "Some Other Time" from "On the Town."

There is no cover or minimum charge at the Cafe du Center.

MELODY MEETING A program of Elizabethan, Sephardic and Spanish music, along with some Bach, is the chamber concert scheduled for tomorrow night's gathering in the "Concert Socials" series, starting at 8:30 o'clock in the Music Room of the Biltmore Hotel on Madison Avenue at 43d Street. Admission is $4.50.

These social Friday evenings have drawn a following among singles people for the quality of the chamber music and for the stimulating mingling with other music-minded singles after the performances, with a flow of lively conversation and coffee.

There is also the opportunity to meet the musicians themselves. Tomorrow, they will be Eva de Lao, soprano; Diva Goodfriend Koven, flutist; Laurie Randolph, guitarist, and Judith Nitzsche, pianist.

Reservations are not necessary, but for more information call 749-5464.

EXOTICA An exhibition of 16th-century paintings by Wen Cheng-ming (1470-1559), the Chinese calligrapher, painter and scholar, goes on display today through June 6 at the Asia House Gallery at 112 East 64th Street.

Most of the works are ink landscapes, but included is a small group of calligraphic scrolls representing the artist's mastery of brushwork. Starting May 3, the gallery plans to alternate some of the paintings with 20 additional scrolls substituted and kept on view throughout the showing.

HOUSEWARMING With "My Fair Lady" and "Mrs. Warren's Profession" on the current theater scene, Shaw's "Heartbreak House" is still another entry, due tonight, tomorrow and Saturday at 8 o'clock, with matinees Saturday and Sunday.

theaters, but this kind of self-deprecating gag. Woody Allen does them better, but, even in his movies, by reducing everything to the same deflated horizon, the gags make for monotony. Here the action—there is lots of it—has been polluted for the sake of gags that are rarely even funny in themselves.

The Dirtwater Fox, played by George Segal, is an incompetent cardsharp who gets hold of some loot stolen by bank robbers. He takes up with the Duchess, a honky-tonk performer played by Goldie Hawn, and together they get into various adventures trying to keep the money and get away from the robbers.

The adventures are more or less routine: a stagecoach crash; a wedding party to hide out among—in this case a Jewish wedding—shootings, dynamitings and drifting downstream in an oarless boat. We feel not a spark of sympathy with the pair; not because they're not likable—they are, rather—but because they are neither believable nor believing.

Both Goldie Hawn and George Segal, properly employed, can do well. Miss Hawn is badly miscast here. She has no skill at brassiness, she can't belt out a song; garters on her look outright embarrassing. Her talent is for being funny and for being sexy, but it is an introspective talent and here it catches cold and dies.

Mr. Segal is not so much miscast as uncast. As in a previous picture, "The Black Bird," he has virtually nothing to do. He has a great face for expressing sharp and funny things, but here it is in dry dock. Someone should put him in the movies.

of the more leafy groves of academe, but in general this majestic publication can stand with the post-World War II catalogues of the National Gallery in London. To say that it sets a new standard in the field in this country would be meaningless, in that there are no old standards to overthrow; let us just say that as regards provenance, condition, dating, iconography, subject matter, preparatory studies and the state of "the literature," all our questions are answered.

To anyone who can get hold of the catalogue, the exhibition acts, therefore, as a set of unusually authentic illustrations. That prehensile diplomatist Thomas M. Messer has himself set it up, and he has made sure that we think again about certain aspects not only of the collection itself but also of the period that it covers. Treading firmly on ground from which most of us would retreat, he does his best even for the paintings of Rudolf Bauer and Hilla Rebay, which few other museums would hang; elsewhere, he parlays what many directors would think of as a weak hand into an unexpected source of strength.

Take, for instance, that foray into the School of Paris in 1937-38. Guggenheim acquired at that time three small paintings by Seurat, a masterpiece by Bonnard, more than one very fine Cubist Picasso, the largest of his Légers ("The Smokers"), the Chagall "Paris Through the Window" of 1913, and several important paintings by Delaunay. He also went deep into Albert Gleizes and gave Jean Metzinger a friendly glance.

In this last, he found few to follow him. Gleizes and Metzinger are in all the history books for having published their book "On Cubism" as early as 1912. (They are also in favor for having said that Cubism derives in the end from Courbet and is fundamentally a form of realism.) Already in 1910 Metzinger was comparing Braque to Chardin; and in the perspective of history it was bad luck for these two intelligent and quite gifted men that in the context of the Cubism that counts for us today—the Cubism of Braque and Picasso and Juan Gris—they did not talk less and look more.

Be that as it may, Guggenheim bought Gleizes's masterpiece, the "Harvest Threshing" of 1912, in 1938. When it was unrolled in 1949 after years of neglect it was found, so Mrs. Rudenstine tells us, to have "a considerable amount of mildew and paint loss." But now it is in good shape, and Mr. Messer has hung it among the paintings he would like us most to remember, and he has also contrived two provocative bays higher up in which Gleizes and Metzinger are allowed to run free.

Not only do they come out of it pretty well, but also some inspired ferreting by Mrs. Rudenstine has given a new dimension of interest to the paintings that Gleizes executed in New York in 1915. Who but she would have presented us with a photograph of the sign (at Broadway and 44th Street) for Chalmers Porosknit Underwear that prompted the central passage in Gleizes's "Chal Por"? The "Astor Cup Race" from that same delirious visit is also most ingeniously interpreted in the new catalogue.

This is one of several instances in which the show and the catalogue in conjunction fight a brilliant delaying action. What is being delayed in these cases is our realization that even on its own terms the collection is very unbalanced. Not to have even one Matisse is a distinction of a kind, even if it is a distinction that few museums would covet. But to be interested in German painting and have nothing by Kirchner and his colleagues in Die Brücke (Expressionist group) is really very odd. To specialize in nonobjective painting and find no room at all for the American Abstract artists group is also very odd.

Doubtless the next volumes of the catalogue (from 1945 onward) will show quite another orientation, in that Hilla Rebay will no longer have her hand on the tiller. Meanwhile we can rejoice in a great catalogue, an incomparable spread of Kandinskys (72 in all, early, middle and late) and an occasional sidelong glance that paid off very well: the two paintings by the English painter Edward Wadsworth, for instance, that are not at all outclassed by their more famous contemporaries.

The acting is awkward, although Irene Cara, as the successful youngest sister, has a persistent charm and conviction that partly compensate for a rough performance.

The picture's minor virtue is a good atmospheric rendering of choked nightclub and street scenes. Its major virtue is some first-rate songs written by Curtis Mayfield and sung with style and power by Lonette McKee, who plays the older sister.

FUN IS FUNNIER THE SECOND TIME AROUND

Reprinted from the New York Times, Sunday, April 4, 1976

By CLIVE BARNES

The surprise hit of the Broadway season has been Ellis Rabb's staging of "The Royal Family," that old George S. Kaufman and Edna Ferber comedy about a family of hysterically histrionic thespians that at times looks quite surprisingly like the Barrymores.

This Bicentennial production started at the McCarter Theater in Princeton, N. J., traveled to the John F. Kennedy Center in Washington, made its New York debut at the Brooklyn Academy of Music and is now on Broadway at the Helen Hayes Theater.

The play has taken the Broadway transition in its stride, without even breaking pace. And well it should, for this play, with its hilarious jokes about actors and acting, its gorgeously contrived show-biz sentimentality and its brash regard for theatrical mystique, is the absolute epitome of Broadway drama.

Most of the cast remains the same, with Eva LeGallienne, Rosemary Harris and Sam Levene as enchantingly funny as ever.

However, in the key role of the aging juvenile star, who could well have been John Barrymore, George Grizzard has departed—for rehearsals on the new Neil Simon play—and his part has been very sensibly taken by Mr. Rabb himself. Mr. Grizzard was interesting, but Mr. Rabb has a more natural command of the role's fantastic and heroic petulance. He looks exactly like Clifton Webb giving an impersonation of Noël Coward giving an impersonation of John Barrymore, and nothing could be funnier.

The play is a treat, and you really owe it to yourself not to miss it.

Dance: Ballet Theater Gala

Capital Is Scene—New Ashton Presented

By CLIVE BARNES
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 7—A certain air of decorous chaos, together with Elizabeth Taylor, Liza Minelli and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger all buzzed around the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts last night, when American Ballet Theater presented one of its inimitable but, apparently, with some variations on the basic theme, virtually repeatable galas. The present gala (the first three took place in New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco) featured the proper complement of ballet superstars—the Cuban ballerina Alicia Alonso, Rudolf Nureyev, Lynn Seymour, Natalia Makarova, Mikhail Baryshnikov and Fernando Bujones.

These galas are always fun—there is a sense of good-natured competitiveness to them, and they usually reveal one or two items that are what Madison Avenue would call "unique selling propositions," dancers in roles that had not been seen locally, interesting debuts, tantalizing juxtapositions.

One of the most illuminating and pungent items came when Miss Seymour gave the local debut of a solo Sir Frederick Ashton recently created for her, "Homage to Isadora." It is danced to the Brahms A flat Waltz. It is brief but seems to be carved in space and time. Ashton, so far as I know, never saw Isadora Duncan dance, but, of course, there is an enormous iconography on her art, and here the choreographer seems to have been particularly inspired by the photographs of Arnold Genthe and even more by those wonderful line drawings by José Clara. Miss Seymour, throwing around rose petals with Bacchanalian abandon, sweeps through the Brahms in diaphanous draperies, with a real sense of style and evocation. It is not a reconstruction—how could it be?—but a vignette of suggestion, and it made me feel a little better about never having seen Isadora plain.

Miss Seymour's other appearance, with Mr. Nureyev in Kenneth MacMillan's unfunny would-be comic duet, "Side Show," was altogether less fortunate, but Mr. Nureyev came splendidly into his own (for a man recovering from two bouts of pneumonia his constitution is incredible) in a zestful "Corsaire pas de deux" with the company loyalist Eleanor D'Antuono. Another Ballet Theater dependable, Martine Van Hamel, was her buoyantly eloquent self in excerpts from Mr. MacMillan's "Concerto" and Harald Lander's "Etudes," matched by Charles Ward and Vladimir Gelvan.

Miss Makarova and Mr. Baryshnikov were seen here for the first time in the British Royal Ballet's version of the Balcony Scene in "Romeo and Juliet." The two Russians were appropriately star-cross'd and danced with a winning fervor and fluency, giving each tep a remarkable emotional quality.

Miss Makarova also charmed with delicate but devastating chic in the "Don Quixote" pas de deux, being partnered by an exultant Mr. Bujones. Mr. Bujones also brilliantly partnered the Japanese ballerina Yoko Morishita in the "Black Swan" pas de deux. Miss Morishita did quite well in this, but her other performance of the evening, in the Rose Adagio from "The Sleeping Beauty," lacked a great deal in elegance, artistry and simple amplitude.

Finally, there was Miss Alonso, a great ballerina in the tempestuous sunset of her career but dancing with a deliberation and artistry that is unlearnable, unique and, particularly in the fugitive, fragile shape of dance, extraordinarily touching. Partnered by the Cuban Jorge Esquival, she set her own signature on this Ballet Theater gala—but Alonso has always been personal to Ballet Theater.

Recital

'Winterreise' Sung by Siegfried Lorenz

By DONAL HENAHAN

No musician should be discouraged from taking on the greatest challenges of the repertory simply because of youth. A 29-year-old singer such as Siegfried Lorenz, for instance, is certain to benefit from wrestling with Schubert's "Die Winterreisse," and might even find things to say about that bone-chilling song cycle that older artists overlook. But Mr. Lorenz's performance of the cycle at Alice Tully Hall on Tuesday night, though tastefully and skillfully sung, was not particularly distinctive or revelatory.

Mr. Lorenz, a tall and studious-looking baritone who has sung with the Komische Oper in East Berlin and has won several lieder competitions, gave a thoroughly respectable performance that nevertheless fell far short of being the shattering experience that "Die Winterreise" can be in the hands of a Hans Hotter or a Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau.

That is not to say, of course, that the German baritone will never grow into this music. Although his voice lacked some flexibility (appoggiaturas and other grace notes were generally indistinct or even ignored), the tone quality was pleasing and perfectly adequate for these technically uncomplicated songs.

The problems of "Die Winterreise" are not vocal, however, but psychological, and Mr. Lorenz's interpretation was psychologically prosaic. The winter's journey to death as depicted in these 24 songs could be a deeply moving story if told from a young man's viewpoint, for the composer himself was hardly over 30 when he died. But Mr. Lorenz, while singing with admirable directness and lack of sentimentality, could not evoke the bleak, gray moods and the pathetic resignation that make "Die Winterreise" the ultimate statement of Romantic despair.

The pianist, Jens Nygaard, accompanied with sensitivity and occasionally succeeded in breaking through the singer's facade of sober uncommitment with phrasings and tone colors that suggested what the performance might have become. One day, perhaps, Mr. Lorenz will sing "Die Winterreise" with more attention to its inner drama, but as yet he has not found the key.

'Baker's Wife' Musical Coming to Broadway

"The Baker's Wife," a new musical based on the Marcel Pagnol French film classic, will be produced on Broadway next fall by David Merrick. Topol, star of the film version of "Fiddler on the Roof," will make his American stage debut in the show, co-starring with Carol Demas, last here in "Grease." The musical, now in rehearsal under the direction of Joseph Hardy, opens at the Los Angeles Civic Light Opera on May 11. Joseph Stein has written the book and Stephen Schwartz the music and lyrics. Joseph Stein has written the book and Stephen Schwartz the music and lyrics.

2 RECITAL DEBUTS IN 'SING OUT' SERIES

Town Hall's "Sing Out, America" series took a curious turn Tuesday night when Karan Armstrong and John Alexander made their New York recital debut. They sang an assortment of songs, arias and duets drawn frequently from a long abandoned repertory, but not quite frequently enough to uggest that the soprano and tenor were kidding the old-fashioned numbers of reviewing them nostalgically.

In any case, there was Miss Armstrong giving her all to items by Elinor Remick Warren and John Alden Carpenter only to be followed a bit later by Alexander delivering songs by Ernest Charles and Albert Hay Malotte with gusto, and making Oscar Fox's "The Hills of Home" the biggest hit of them all.

There were, in addition, Bernstein's "I Hate Music" arias Blitzstein's "Regina" and Menotti's "The Last Savange," some folk-song arrangements and, finally, duets by Charles Wakefield Cadman, from "A Witch of Salem," and Vittorio Giannini, from "The Taming of the Shrew."

It would be nice to say that this all went together marvelously, but that would be stretching things a bit. No, the enjoyment had to come, rather, from relishing individual items for associations dredged up from the past or for the all-out performances given by these two big voiced opera singers.

ALLEN HUGHES

A Caravaggio For Cleveland

A "lost" painting by the major 16th-century Italian artist Michelangelo Merisi da Caravaggio has been acquired by the Cleveland Museum of Art. The 7-foot-by-5-foot canvas depicts the martyrdom of St. Andrew the Apostle. After the 17th century it had dropped out of sight for some 300 years, but it surfaced unexpectedly in a Spanish collection in 1973. It is one of only five Caravaggios in the United States.

A masterful "psychological" composition, in which the saint is depicted at the moment of dying on a cross as a young man reaches up to release him, the painting was probably done in 1607, toward the end of Caravaggio's life. Its vivid realism, achieved with sharp contrasts of light and shadow, are characteristic of the artist's innovative style, which has led scholars to cite him as the most influential Italian painter of his age.

The work, which was purchased from a London dealer for an undisclosed sum, has been identified as the lost original taken from Italy to Spain in 1610 by the Conde de Benavente, Spanish viceroy in Naples, where it was probably painted.

Bank of America to Buy New York State's Notes

segregate and impound incoming revenues "sufficient to repay note holders."

The Assembly approved an impoundment measure this evening by a vote of 86 to 49, as several Republicans objected that the bill was, as one put it, "a gold-plated ripoff" by the banks. They said the state should demand low-interest rates in return for the bill. No interest has been set for the state's notes in any of the preliminary decisions by any of the banks to participate in the borrowing.

Originally the Bank of America demanded that the Legislature reaffirm the state constitutional pledge that debt obligations have a first claim to available revenues, but it was persuaded to accept the impoundment legislation as an alternative.

The second condition imposed by the Bank of America was an agreement by Governor Carey and the legislative leaders to "forestall any proposal to legislate a moratorium" on the payment of the notes, like the moratorium the Legislature imposed last year on New York City notes. Here again, the bank had asked initially for something stronger, which was for the Legislature itself to make such a promise, but it settled for an 'agreement by the leaders.

The bank's third demand was for "assurance" that the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development "proceed with a program to insure" $258 million worth of mortgages of state-financed middle-income housing in the Mitchell-Lama program.

Federal mortgage insurance was an essential ingredient to the $2.6 billion rescue of the state construction agencies assembled last month. The state's prospectus for its notes said that it had "received an indication" of the Federal Government's "willingness to proceed" on the insurance program, but it was not clear today whether such an indication would be sufficient for the Bank of America.

In a statement saying he was "encouraged" by today's developments, Peter C. Goldmark Jr., the State Budget Director, nonetheless cautioned that the Bank of America's conditions "underscore the fact that we have some difficult steps to complete."

The state has $4 billion in borrowing needs this spring to "roll over" the deficit of the 1975-76 fiscal year, keep its own operations going and channel a huge bulge of local-assistance payments to counties, cities and school districts.

The biggest share of its total requirement is being financed by state pension systems and other treasury funds within the state's control. About $1.75 billion is to be financed by private investors.

The April 15 deadline is critical because all potential participants in the state's financing have made their agreement contingent upon participation by the others by that date.

Can a Poodle Find Love and Happiness In the 9-to-5 Life?

By VIRGINIA LEE WARREN

Lewis Kaye, head of a real estate firm bearing his name, recently went to the Getty building to rent office space. But he never even looked at a suite when he learned that the building, on Madison Avenue near 61st Street, bars dogs. Mr. Kaye is accustomed to having his gray poodle in his office.

Janet Jones was doing fine at her job of designing programs that affected corporate policies and procedures of an international airline. Then someone in industrial relations discovered that she was bringing her Yorkshire terrier and, while she kept Tuffy in a canvas tote bag beside her desk, this was considered bad for her image.

"That wasn't the only reason I left and went into business for myself," Miss Jones said the other day, "but it certainly had something to do with it."

Eager and Proud

Such instances may be a bit extreme but on these mornings many a dog trotting alongside its owner is bound for a 9-to-5 day at the office. In one East Side building of 10 stories and two penthouses, 16 dogs, everything from a German shepherd to a Yorkshire terrier, come eagerly and proudly to work.

The reason the owners bring the animals is that they don't want them to be lonely; that's what the owners say. But to see the pleasure that they get out of having Toodles or Tuli or Michel or Ginger or Lancelot within petting distance all day is to be convinced that having a dog in the office is just as important to the owners as to the dogs. Besides, there is that companionable stroll to and from the place of work—an easy way to give the animal exercise.

And sometimes there is an extra dividend, a kind of serendipity. Lewis Ufland, who has his own public relations firm, has learned that his poodle, Jody, doesn't mind so much his going out at night if she's been with him all day.

Dr. Meri Schachter, a psychiatrist, says that although she certainly does not use her Cairn terrier, Dundee, as part of the therapy, she has learned that some withdrawn and tense patients, especially children, find it easier to relax if Dundee is around. (She learned this by accident; the Cairn was being kept in a back room but one day he broke out of his solitary confinement and ambled into the main office; he still isn't allowed there always.)

Ted Schultheis, president of Batan Enterprises (real estate), has noticed that the melting and beseeching gaze of Ginger, his Irish setter, sometimes calms an irate tenant.

The 'Brown Bag Dog'

Having one's own office naturally makes it easier to bring along a dog, providing the building does not mind. Lewis Kaye found a suite in 655 Madison Avenue for his real estate firm. And there Toodles, Mr. Kaye's poodle, has the run of the place, the run consisting mostly of trailing anyone who brings in food.

"We call him the brown bag dog," says his owner. "He manages to eat all day long."

Next best to having an office of your own is having a boss who brings a dog; the boss then can hardly say no to someone else's bringing one. Thus, when Donald Kirk, president of Frew Hall Travel Inc., and his wife, Maurine, brought Thistle and Burr, their Scotch terriers, the others who work for the agency brought Tiger (a dachshund), Noelle (a Yorkshire terrier), Lancelot (a poodle) and MacGregor, (a West Highland white terrier).

Having the building's owner bring his dog is probably the best of all. That's the situation at 667 Madison Avenue (near 61st Street); it's the office building that has 16 dogs. Batan Enterprises, Mr. Schultheis's firm, owns and runs the building and in Mr. Schultheis's office, in addition to his Irish setter, are a Pekinese (Holly) and a Weimaraner (Hannah) that belong to his associate, Mary Margarey Scribner. Holly and Hannah are the only ones living so far away that they have to come by taxi; they don't come every day.

To visit the dogs in their offices at 667 Madison is to be greeted with everything from a quizzical silence to loving assaults accompanied by wild and indiscriminate kissing (there are those who might call it slobbering). It is also to become aware of certain distinctive traits and habits.

Rests on Visitor's Arms

Michel, a silvery little poodle, lies on the floor and crosses her front paws ever so elegantly after escorting James St. Laurence O'Toole to work every morning. Mr. O'Toole appraises and identifies art for estates, collectors and museums.

Ginger, Mr. Schultheis's Irish setter, gazes soulfully into a visitor's eyes while putting first one paw, then the other, on the visitor's arm, especially if the visitor is trying to write.

Those winning traits and habits that aren't discernible to a first-time visitor are lovingly described by the dogs' owners.

For instance, Monte, the West Highland white that belongs to Francis Cresci, consul for Monte Carlo, is meticulous about cleaning his paws on doormats.

Jody, Lewis Ufland's poodle, hails taxis.

Josephine, a Great Dane, likes to walk down the street holding in her mouth the hand of her owner, Francine Leibman. Since the Great Dane weighs 110 and Miss Leibman 85, their progress attracts a good deal of attention. "People are always asking me about my hand in Josephine's mouth," said Miss Leibman; she seemed surprised. It was her boss, the head of Video Enterprises Inc., who suggested that she let the dog bring her each day to the office.)

Poodles Tuli and Daisy escort Gloria Safier, a literary agent, to work and read scripts while she is out to lunch. (So Miss Safier says.)

And Toodles, Lewis Kaye's poodle, leaps up into a chair and sticks out his neck when Mr. Kaye picks up the collar with leash attached.

Dines Out, Too

All of the dogs seem ready to leave the office when it's time to go home, which doesn't mean that they won't prance happily back to it the following morning. But they've had a hard day, what with greeting visitors, playing with toys and sleeping.

There is one dog, though, the tiniest of the lot, for whom leaving the office does not mean a quiet evening at home; at least not very often. When Janet Jones plops Tuffy's three pounds into a canvas tote bag and locks up Management Woman Inc., she and the dog may well go on to dinner and then to see a play.

"In restaurants Tuffy stays in the bag," Miss Jones said, "but in theaters, after the curtain goes up and the house is dark, she sits in my lap. I wouldn't dream of leaving her at home."

If dogs have such a good time in offices and their owners love having them there, why not cats? The reason usually given is: cats don't like to travel, they like to stay at home, and they don't mind staying alone because they are so self-sufficient.

Nevertheless, Dr. Murray Budabin, a neurologist, has a cat in his office, a black one with a white locket, and during consultations Narcissus sits on his desk and stares at the patients.

"I really don't think a doctor should have a cat in the office," the neurologist said, "but no patient objected. Narcissus is very affectionate; she especially likes children. She seems to put them at ease. When a child cries Narcissus will look in an interested way, which usually slows up the tears."

Then Dr. Budabin said, "Narcissus comes when she's called and she sits on the desk at command." After a pause he added, "Actually I'm a dog man; my wife gave me Narcissus one...

The New York Times/Gene Maggio and Meyer Liebowitz

Jody seems to find the phone conversations of Lewis Ufland, above, fascinating. Tiger, right, sleeps behind Colette Combemal when not snuggled beside her.

Three-pound Tuffy is accustomed to going to work with Janet Jones, above.

Fun for Children: Eating on a Ferry

Skyline-watchers have all kinds of ways to view the city—from skyscrapers, tour boats, helicopters. One of the newest view purveyors, and certainly one of the most unusual places to take children, is the Binghampton, a ferry converted into a restaurant on the Hudson. It sits on the New Jersey shore almost directly across from the Riverside Church at 122d Street (where people who've climbed to the top can look down on people who've gone to the Binghampton to look up).

The ferry has two dining areas. The main one downstairs has no view, but it's still interesting with the ship's engine as the centerpiece and two enormous fish tanks.

The Engine Room, primarily serving seafood, can be expensive for family dining, but upstairs, in the Galley, where the view is, there are much less expensive, informal meals. A hamburger with cole slaw is $2.25.

The boat, which operated for 82 years before its retirement in 1967 was recently refurbished with gleaming brass and stained glass. But none of the interior splendor compares to the early-evening view from the deck as the lights come up over Manhattan.

Very early in the evening and lunchtime are the wisest times for families. The place does get crowded. The Binghampton is on River Road in Edgewater, N.J. (201) 941-2311. Closed Mondays.

Shapes in Plastic For Traditionalists

By RUTH ROBINSON

Even the most hidebound traditionalist with a loathing for plastic should be able to coexist with the designer line of home accessories by Edgar Watkins/Cubics, which are intended to blend in with traditional furnishings.

"If things are good they work together," says Mr. Watkins explaining that an octagonal serving tray of clear acrylic with chamfered corners and silver legs ("very typical of us") would be perfectly at home with a Georgian silver coffee service. Mind you, he doesn't suggest that it replace a silver tray, just that it serve as a fresh, smart, additional accessory.

At their small factory near City Hall, Mr. Watkins and his partner, Stephen Kirschenbaum, manufacture 250 items, including accessories for bed and bath, desk and bar as well as a collection of 75 placemats. Many of these utilize the see-through concept and gain a dimension from the beauty of the table surface showing through as do traditional open-work linens.

There are also decorative objects—shells, starfish, sea horses, rock crystals, fish and logs—cast of clear polyester molded from the original, cachepots silk-screened with animals and box-like ice chests ("the best things we do") in clear acrylic as well as in more ostentatious fake malachite, lapis lazuli and tortoise shell.

Prices in the line, available at Lord & Taylor, Bonwit Teller and Saks Fifth Avenue, range from $2.50 for a napkin ring ornamented perhaps with a molded strawberry to $350 for an enormous breakfast tray that should, Mr. Kirschenbaum feels, come equipped with a butler.

"We have been told they won't negotiate, to there will be a fight on the floor," said Bronx Democrat who is chairman of the study group.

James Murphy, executive vice president of the New York Bankers Association, which represents commercial banks, viewed the additional time as an opportunity to build support for an approach that softens the commercial banks' earlier opposition to the bill.

He said commercial banks now would support legislation that froze the number of savings-bank checking accounts at their current level. He also said they would favor allowing new accounts only after Federal banking regulations equalized the interest that the savings and commercial banks can pay on savings accounts.

Supporters of the bill say they are not prepared to make any changes or concessions now. According to Lawrence Costiglio, a spokesman for the Savings Bank Association of New York, there are enough votes to pass the bill now.

The bill, sponsored by Assemblyman George Cincotta, Democrat of Brooklyn, is essentially a proposal put forward two months ago by the State Superintendent of Banks, John G. Heimann. It would grant legislative permission to maintain 165,000 savings-bank checking, or NOW accounts. These accounts, for Negotiable Orders of Withdrawal, were first allowed in 1974 by the State Banking Department. However, a court recently ruled that the privilege must be approved by the Legislature or the accounts must be closed by May 1.

Other Provisions

The bill also grants the savings banks limited overdraft privileges on the accounts and the authority to grant personal loans.

While opponents view the bill as a desirable consumer measure, many maintain that the savings banks should not be granted the privilege unless they also agree to democratize their selection of directors, increase their investments in the state, and finance a "substantial" fund that would make high-risk mortgage loans in certain neighborhoods.

For their part, representatives of the savings banks who have been lobbying for the Cincotta bill for weeks have refused to negotiate any remedies to the alleged redlining until after the checking-account measure passed.

HUGHES IS BURIED IN BRIEF CEREMONY

20 Mourners Attend Rites at Grave Next to Those of His Parents in Houston

By JAMES P. STERBA
Special to The New York Times

HOUSTON, April 7—Howard Robard Hughes Jr. was buried next to his parents this morning after a simple, eight-minute graveside ceremony.

There were no funeral-home services, no procession to the cemetery, no pallbearers. Funeral home attendants placed the billionaire's silver-colored copper coffin above the grave before the service. Two dozen white roses, a spray of red anteriums, a bouquet of yellow carnations and a green unflowered wreath adorned it.

As 20 mourners, mostly cousins, sat on folding chairs, the Very Rev. Robert T. Gibson read the standard burial rites from the Book of Common Prayer of the Episcopal Church.

"We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out," he read. He was the only person to speak. There was little visible emotion. No tears were observed.

The ceremony ended at 8:02 A.M., and the mourners entered their automobiles and drove off while about 30 reporters and photographers watched the coffin being lowered into a stainless steel vault. Workmen then covered it with earth.

Body Identified

Six hours later the Federal Bureau of Investigation in Washington confirmed that the body was Mr. Hughes's. The reclusive industrialist died Monday of kidney failure at the age of 70.

The F.B.I. said that it had matched fingerprints taken from the body at an autopsy here yesterday with those made by Mr. Hughes when he applied for a pilot's license in the 1930's. It was the first independent confirmation of the body's identity. Previous identification had been supplied by two personal physicians, Dr. Wilbur S. Thain and Dr. Lawrence Chaffin, and by an aide, John M. Holmes Jr.

Those three men had accompanied Mr. Hughes from Acapulco, Mexico, to Houston, where he was to have entered the Methodist Hospital for examination and treatment. They told doctors here that Mr. Hughes died at 1:27 P.M. Monday aboard their chartered jet.

A private autopsy performed by Dr. Jack L. Titus, the hospital's pathologist, yesterday afternoon showed the cause of death.

Time of Death Confirmed

Dr. Joseph A. Jachimczyk, the Harris County medical examiner, was invited to observe the autopsy. He said preliminary results indicated that the time of death was approximately as stated by Mr. Hughes's physicians. He said he suspected no foul play.

Methodist Hospital officials said they did not plan to make public complete results of the autopsy when tests of body tissue were concluded.

The autopsy showed Mr. Hughes to be emaciated and he appeared to have been bedridden for months. At death, he weighed only 90 pounds. His height had shrunk 2 inches to 6 feet 2 inches.

His aides told medical officials here that he had been reluctant to drink water or to be medically examined. They said his condition weakened last week but that it stabilized on Saturday. Then on Sunday, he became worse and they made preparations to move him to a hospital.

Choice of Hospital

The choice of the Methodist Hospital here was apparently made by Ken Wright, executive director of the Hughes Medical Institute in Miami. There is no record of Mr. Hughes's receiving treatment at the hospital. However, the institute has made grants for biomedical research to the Baylor College of Medicine since 1971, including $190,000 this year. Methodist Hospital is Baylor's teaching affiliate, and Mr. Wright had visited it recently.

Mr. Wright reportedly telephoned Dr. Henry D. MacIntrish, the school's liaison official for grants and its chief of internal medicine, at 8:30 A.M. Monday. Mr. Wright told him he wanted to bring Mr. Hughes to the hospital, but he did not indicate what Mr. Hughes's medical problems might be.

After the autopsy the body was taken to the George H. Lewis & Sons Funeral Home. At 7 A.M. today the hearse left the funeral home for the trip through Houston's Memorial Park to the Glenwood Cemetery, which is in a shabby neigborhood near downtown Houston.

The Hughes family plot is in a heavily wooded area on a slope toward the back of the cemetery, which abuts Buffalo Bayou. There, beside a bamboo shrub and a paved cemetery road, the grave was dug just below and to the right of where his parents are buried.

Their graves have a simple flat marker, with five bronze trumpet-like urns rising from it, and their names and dates of birth and death embedded with bronze inlay.

The hearse arrived at 7:20 A.M. Mr. Hughes's relatives, led by Mrs. Frederick R. Lummis, an aunt and his closest next of kin, arrived 25 minutes later. Two Hughes aides were also at the graveside.

Mr. Gibson, the minister at the burial service, is dean of Christ Cathedral here. Mr. Hughes attended church there as a boy, and he was once named king at the church's annual May Day fete.

Mexican Police Arrest 3 Hughes Aides

By ALAN RIDING
Special to The New York Times

ACAPULCO, Mexico, April 7—The Mexican police today arrested the three aides of Howard R. Hughes who stayed on here after the ailing billionaire was flown out of this Pacific Coast resort Monday.

Police sources refused to name the three men or to disclose the reason for their arrest but indicated that the men were being interrogated and would not be immediately released.

The sources also stressed that the current investigation began three weeks ago and had not been touched off by Mr. Hughes's death Monday while being flown from here to Houston for medical treatment.

Agents of Mexico's Federal Judicial Police have also entered and searched the penthouse suite at the Acapulco Princess Hotel, where Mr. Hughes and at least a dozen aides had lived in seclusion since they moved here from the Bahamas on Feb. 11.

Police sources said that the rooms would probably be sealed and that no outsiders would be permitted to enter them. Until yesterday, Mr. Hughes's own security guards prevented evene hotel staff from reaching the floor.

According to the sources, some of Mr. Hughes's belongings were removed Monday, but a considerable amount of medical equipment as well as personal papers and documents remained.

At least six Hughes assistants left here Monday. The three who remained had apparently intended to leave Mexico yesterday.

But around noon yesterday, while most guests still believed Mr. Hughes was secluded here, the luxurious hotel was invaded by armed plainclothse agents of the Mexican Federal Judicial Police. They immediately demanded to enter the penthouse suites still rented and occupied by Mr. Hughes's Summa Corporation at a cost of $1,419 a night.

After a flurry of meetings between the agents, led by a senior official of the Attorney General's Office, and the hotel management, the police were allowed to enter.

The three unidentified aides were arrested in the hotel and escorted to the federal police headquarters in downtown Acapulco for questioning.

The officials did say, however, that the investigation was a Mexican initiative and was not in response to a request by the United States Government.

Hughes Estate Fight Seen As Doubts Rise About Will

a medical research trust, the nonprofit Howard Hughes Medical Institute to which he donated Hughes Aircraft in 1954.

The three top executives of Mr. Hughes's network of companies were all in the Los Angeles area today, but not available for comment. Corporate spokesmen said it was "inappropriate" to comment about Mr. Hughes's will so soon after his death.

He died Monday in an ambulance plane which flew from Acapulco, Mexico, where he has lived for the last several months, and was bound for Houston, where he was born and where his surviving relatives mostly live.

The senior executive is F. W. Gay, a shy, reclusive person who has worked for Mr. Hughes for 30 years since graduating from the University of California at Los Angeles. Mr. Gay is executive vice president of Summa, and works from an office at Encino, a Los Angeles suburb.

Nadine Henley, Mr. Hughes's secretary, and then his executive assistant for many years, is senior vice president of Summa. She also lives in the Los Angeles area.

Chester C. Davis, partner in Davis and Cox, a New York law firm, is chief counsel of Summa. He, too, was in Encino today.

It is not clear what the relationship is between these executives, all close to Mr. Hughes, and his family members who have had virtually nothing to do with him for most of his life.

But inheritance laws being what they are, the family members will be the ones who score in court if no will cutting them out turns up. The question will be which family members to pick. Some who watched him hide out for 20 years thought it ironic that, after his death, Howard Hughes's estate could be picked over in inheritance fights in courts that he fought so hard to stay away from for so many years.

Mr. Hughes's closest living relative is an 85-year-old aunt, Mrs. Frederick Lummis Sr., of Houston. Her son, William R. Lummis, a lawyer, reportedly made Mr. Hughes's funeral and burial arrangements and agreed to the pathological procedures that established kidney failure as the cause of death.

Mrs. Lummis is the younger sister of Mr. Hughes's mother, that late Allene Gano Hughes, and lived as a young woman for a time in the household where Mr. Hughes was growing up. But the nephew and aunt have not seen each other in decades, it was said.

Other cousins have been named in published reports as Dr. Frederick Lummis Jr., a physician; Howard Gano, Pat Houston, Mrs. Platt Davis, Mrs. John Lindsey, Mrs. George Neff and Mrs. Paul Russell.

Howard Hughes had no known children.

His two marriages both ended in divorce. From time to time in the years after he became a recluse, moving from one hotel to another, persons claiming to be his children born out of wedlock turned up. His lawyers brushed them aside as pretenders.

The absence of a will that would effect the transfer of the Hughes wealth to the Howard Hughes Medical Institute is, if true, shocking in view of the statements made by him and by his agents.

The only time Mr. Hughes spoke publicly in the last 15 years, at a telephone news conference from his Bahamas hotel to a group of reporters in Los Angeles, he answered a question about medical research by saying "that's where the bulk of my estate will go."

In 1954 he gave the institute the properties that were incorporated as Hughes Aircraft, and he has been the sole trustee of the institute, which gave him complete control of its affairs.

He appointed to the executive board of the Institute the three persons who were his top officers in Summa Corporation —Miss Henley, Mr. Gay and Mr. Davis.

Plans were tentatively made within Summa that, after Mr. Hughes had died, and the properties had been transferred to the Institute, they would be sold in a stock offer to the public.

The Institute could not continue to operate the profit making enterprises and still maintain its tax exempt charter.

There is a further irony, according to accounts given recently by one well-placed Hughes executive. This person said that many wills had been drawn for Mr. Hughes's signature over the years, but that he had never signed them.

One standard clause, according to this account, was language that disinherited Mr. Hughes's surviving relatives — the persons who now stand to inherit what would be left of his millions after the tax collector had picked the estate's bones.

Roberts may have been speaking partly in jest, but the fact was that Lane, seated beside Roberts, said not a word while Roberts was on stage. He smiled diffidently and that was all. Afterward, he talked a bit, but not much.

Also characteristically, Roberts said that while he was relinquishing the chairmanship of the tournament to Lane, he was staying on "for the time being" as chairman of the Augusta National Golf Club, which he, Bob Jones and others formed in 1931.

The occasion was the customary news conference Roberts holds the day before the Masters. By the nature of his personality, a Roberts news conference is one of the rare occasions in sports where anyone is addressed as "Mister."

A field of 72 of the world's best golfers—62 professionals and 10 amateurs — is ready for the 40th Masters, which begins at 9:30 A.M. tomorrow on the flawlessly prepared Augusta National course. As always in this best run of golf tournaments, there was an electric air of anticipation that affects everyone from the greenest rookie to Jack Nicklaus, the defending champion.

Nicklaus said that even though he had won five times, he still felt keyed up. If he didn't get nervous, he said, it would be time to quit.

Roberts, wearing the Augusta National uniform of green blazer and yellow necktie, handled with aplomb and an occasional wry expression a wide variety of questions, from commercialism in golf tournaments to the necessity of making the 13th hole, a par 5 of 485 yards, a bit tougher.

Roberts made it a point to emphasize that the Masters had never been used to sell anything but he also, with a bit of a twinkle, contradicted himself by plugging his recently published book, "The Story of Augusta National."

On the strength of the book Roberts, "the new

Yankees Open vs. Brewers

By MURRAY CHASS
Special to The New York Times

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., April 7—Only three weeks after Commissioner Bowie Kuhn had ordered spring training camps opened, the Yankees and Mets closed theirs today and headed north to begin the season some people thought would never begin. The Yankees open tomorrow in Milwaukee, the Mets Friday in New York against Montreal.

However, for one player, Tommy Davis, the beginning of the season could mean the end of a career. For another, Ron Blomberg, it could mean the renewal of his 1975 shoulder problems.

Before the Yankees edged the Mets, 5-4, in 10 innings in the final exhibition game, they told Davis he was being released. During the game Blomberg reinjured his right shoulder. In three hours, the Yankees' designated-hitter duo had been wiped out.

Davis's outlook was bleak. Teams generally aren't interested in 37-year-old designated hitters on opening day.

Blomberg's injury meant that he wouldn't be the designated hitter in tomorrow's opener. Thurman Munson, recovering from a broken finger and not ready to catch, will be the dh instead. How long Blomberg will be out and whether he'll be placed on the disabled list depends on how serious the injury is.

Mickey Rivers, the fleet center fielder, was also hurt in the game, suffering a bruised right knee while sliding into second base. But he said he would be able to play tomorrow.

"Why do these things have to happen to us now?" asked Billy Martin, about to begin his first full season as Yankee manager.

"It's pretty bad," Blomberg said of his injury. "Right now I can't move my shoulder much at all. It's real stiff."

Blomberg, who was to be the left-handed designated hitter, hurt the shoulder swinging at and missing a pitch in the sixth inning. He felt the pain in the same place that he did last season. The pain last year limited him to 34 games.

"I don't know what they're going to do," said Blomberg, who fears the disabled list as some people fear flying. "I'll probably get released tomorrow.

"I did everything the doctor told me to do. I worked awful hard. I kept a bat in my hands all the time. I swung 800 times a day. When it comes down to a game, I don't know what happens. It just popped.

"I just can't take this another year. I worked every day during the winter, 10 hours a day. I'm dedicated."

Davis, 10 years Blomberg's senior, would take any sea-

Giants Sign Csonka To a Multiyear Pact

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE

The Giants last night signed Larry Csonka, the big fullback who twice helped the Miami Dolphins win the Super Bowl.

The New York team came to terms with Csonka and his agent, Ed Keating, after a day of negotiations at the club's training site at Pace University in Pleasantville, N. Y., and later in the city. Wellington Mara, the president, and Andy Robustelli, director of operations, did the negotiating for the Giants.

The contract was said to be a "multiyear one," according to Robustelli, which both sides had sought. But no specific terms were disclosed at a news conference last night in Gallagher's restaurant.

"It's great to be here," said Csonka. He was wearing an open shirt under a leisure jacket, and his large bull neck was highly visible, as was the Csonak mustache, closely trimmed.

Csonka, a free agent, and Keating had broken off negotiations on Tuesday with the Dolphins, whose chief executive, Joe Robbie, considered the 29-year-old athlete's demands to be exorbitant.

Robbie had said that Csonka sought a four-year contract with a salary of $250,000 a year, a $50,000 cash bonus for signing, an annual bonus of $15,000, a 20-year loan of $125,000, a second job as a public relations person for the club complete wiht expense account, nine first-class round-trip airplant tickets between Miami and Cleveland or Pittsburgh (Csonka now lives in Lisbon, Ohio, which he describes as "near Youngstown and Canton"), game tickets, a new car and a townhouse apartment.

"I don't deny those figures are astronomical," Csonka had told The Miami Herald on Tuesday. "But you have to start somewhere."

After the signing with the Giants, eKating said the new contract was "somewhat comparable" to the terms Robbie had said he spurned. "They blitzed us," said Keating, meaning that the Giants were immediately agreeable ot the Csonka-Keating proposals yesterday.

So the Giants paid dearly. Keating said that 15 of the 28 National Football League teams had expressed interest i nhis client, six with seriousness. If the Giants had passed, the Baltimore Colts and Cleveland Browns were next, wtih appointments made.

The Syracuse alumnus had seven big seasons with the Dolphins and then jumped to the World Football League last year with a guaranteed contract from John Bassett, the owner of the Memphis Southmen. After the W.F.L. ceased operations last November, Bassett kept Csonka and others under contract with the hope that the National Football League would give him an expansion franchise.

The N.F.L. owners spurned Bassett's proposal at their meeting in San Diego last month and the wealthy Toronto sportsman then released Csonka and several others, including Paul Warfield, from any obligations.

Warfield, who had jumped to Memphis from Miami with Csonka and Jim Kiick, signed on Tuesday as a free agent with the Cleveland Browns.

Do the Giants, or the Browns, owe the Dolphins some kind of player compensation, as in the disputed Rozelle rule, for having signed players last owned in the N.F.L. by the Miami club. "It's up in the air," said Mara. "That won't be determined until a new contract is agreed upon with the heads the owner group still negotiating with the players association on such a contract.

Injured part of the time, Csonka had a medicore season playing for the Memphis team, whose head coach, John McVay, is now on the Giants' staff as an assistant to Bill Arnsparger, the head coach. When Csonka played in Miami, Arnsparger was an assistant to Don Shula, the head coach.

Csonka said the presence of Arnsparger was one of the major reasons why he chose the Giants. "Also," he said, "everybody wants a whirl in New York. The promotional possibilities are great."

The Giants announced several weeks ago they were interested in talking to Csonka. The club needed a star player to focus on as it moves into its new 75,000-seat stadium, Meadowlands, in East Rutherford, N.J.

Ray Walsh, the business manager, said that Csonka

Orr, Out of Playoffs, Waits for Gold Rush

By GERALD ESKENAZI

Bobby Orr has decided not to rejoin the Boston Bruins for the Stanley Cup playoffs, but to continue therapy for his injured knee and wait for what his agent still believes will be "the greatest money offer in the history of sports."

"He needs rest and rehabilitation. That's what his doctor told him," said Alan Eagleson, Orr's lawyer, who is also the head of the National Hockey League Players Association.

Eagleson, speaking yesterday by telephone from Toronto, declared that Orr "could be another Catfish Hunter."

He explained that Orr, whose talent gave a new dimension to hockey's defensive strategies, has a "unique" contract that would enable him to join any club in the league on Oct. 1, without that club having to compensate the Bruins.

Orr is in the final year of a five-year pact worth $200,000 annually. His contract ends on June 1, as do all hockey contracts. Any club can negotiate with him after June 1, but if a team signs him before Oct. 1, that team must reimburse Boston. The compensation would be determined by an impartial arbitrator.

However, Eagleson said that five years ago he had a special clause—"the only one of its kind in sports"—put in the contract that would enable Orr to go wherever he wanted without worrying whether the new team had to make a deal with Boston.

Reds Start With Spirit of '75

CINCINNATI, April 7 (UPI)—Sparky Anderson, Cincinnati Reds manager, has a modest prediction on the eve of the 1976 baseball season.

"We'll win it all," he said today. "Our fans won't be satisfied with anything less."

The Reds, traditional hosts of the National League season opener, begin defense of their world championship tomorrow afternoon in sold-out Riverfront Stadium against the Houston Astros.

"I honestly believe that, over all, this is the strongest club I've ever taken north," Anderson said.

Besides predicting his club will repeat as world champions, Anderson figures the league's most valuable player will again be a Red and he hopes his sometimes-maligned pitching staff can produce two or three 20-game winners.

"Johnny Bench has won it [M.V.P.] twice, Pete Rose once and Joe Morgan once in the last six years," Anderson said. "Everyone on the club is rooting for Tony Perez to win it this year. But if it isn't Doggie [Perez] it'll be some other player on our club."

Anderson predicted the club would have at least two 20-game winners.

"The top candidates are Jack Billingham, Gary Nolan and Don Gullett," he said. "Don't overlook Freddie Norman, though.

However, as of now, Anderson also tags Gullett "my biggest concern."

"Right now, I'd have to say he won't be ready to start until the San Francisco series," said Anderson. "That's April 16, 17 and 18. It's not because of any injury. It's just he got such a late start.

"That's unfortunate, be-

Humiliation Is the National Pastime

AUGUSTA, Ga., April 7—Tomorrow the baseball season opens, the National Football League conducts its college draft and the Masters golf tournament begins. Jack Nicklaus won't start for the New York Yankees, Catfish Hunter won't be the first choice of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers and Leroy Selmon won't be leading the Masters; it will only seem that way. But never before has baseball needed baseball as much as it does now. After the lingering labor dispute, after the unpleasant aroma of the Andy Messersmith mess, after the unnecessary hassle of Tom Seaver's contract negotiations, baseball needs Catfish Hunter to pitch a shutout today or Henry Aaron to hit a home run or Pete Rose to slide head first. Or even Charles O. Finley to make another trade. Assuming that Reggie Jackson reports, the Oakland A's trade that sent him and Ken Holtzman to the Baltimore Orioles might swing the balance of power in both American League divisions.

Sports of The Times

I like the Orioles to dethrone the Boston Red Sox in the American League East and the Kansas City Royals to surpass what is left of the A's in the West.

In the National League, look for the Cincinnati Reds to maintain their domination in the West and for the Philadelphia Phillies to win the East.

As for the New York teams, the Yankees and the Mets each might not finish higher than fourth in their respective divisions.

Messersmith and Seaver

Andy Messersmith would have provided the Yankees with another established starter. Without the 32 home runs that Bobby Bonds supplied before he was traded to the California Angels, the Yankees need almost flawless pitching and defense. But the front office apparently altered the offer to Messersmith in transferring the terms from a memo to a contract. Rather than be embarrassed by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, the Yankees withdrew their controversial offer. George Steinbrenner 3d, the Yankees' owner, keeps talking about doing what's "good for baseball" but he doesn't always do it.

After the Tom Seaver situation, the other members of the Mets must be wondering if it's worth while to have a big season. Tom Seaver won the Cy Young Award last year and M. Donald Grant, the Mets' chairman, rewarded him with humiliation before settling. In sports, humiliation has become the national pastime.

In the N.F.L., Joe Robbie, the principal owner of the Miami Dolphins, has disclosed the terms of Larry Csonka's proposal for a contract of over $1 million for four years—salary, bonus, loan, first-class airline tickets, game tickets, etc. Joe Robbie probably thought he was appealing to the public resentment of high-salaried athletes. Instead, he appealed to those who remembered Csonka's description of Robbie long before the big fullback signed with the World Football League two years ago.

"Sooner or later a player doesn't mean any more to him than an expensive Xerox machine does," Csonka said. "When a player is outdated, that's it."

But the New York Giants don't consider Larry Csonka outdated. Rather than humiliating the 29-year-old fullback, they signed him today to a three-year contract for more than $1 million. The Giants were among the first N.F.L. teams to contact Csonka's agent, Ed Keating, when the World Football League folded last season. Typically, the Jets, despite the possible loss of John Riggins on May 1 as a free agent, did not pursue Csonka beyond a routine meeting recently at which Keating informed Al Ward, the Jets' general manager, of Csonka's contract requests. "But the Jets never got back to me," Keating says.

Meanwhile, the mention in this space last Sunday of whispers that the N.F.L. had offered Joe Kapp an out-of-court settlement of $1 million long before the antitrust trial has been disputed by Pete Rozelle, the commissioner. Rozelle contends that the only settlement talk involved Kapp's request for $15 million to drop his litigation on the eve of the trial in which a six-person jury awarded Kapp zero in damages.

In commenting on the outcome of the Kapp trial, Rozelle spoke of "feeling sorry" for the former quarterback, now 37 years old, after missing the last five seasons because of his litigation. But if the N.F.L. is truly sorry, some team should consider Kapp as a potential head coach. Had he continued playing, his leadership and his personality would have made him a natural as a coach. But after all those legal expenses, the N.F.L. teams probably will try to humiliate Joe Kapp by ignoring him.

The Silent Successor

Humiliation even developed here today at the Augusta National Golf Club, which is supposed to project the essence of Southern manners and hospitality.

Clifford Roberts, the 82-year-old master of the Masters, retired as the tournament chairman. At the announcement, he wore his green jacket and sat at a table below the scoreboard in the press building and introduced his successor, William H. Lane, a Houston food magnate, but he wouldn't let his successor speak.

"I am the chairman of this tournament until its conclusion," Roberts said gruffly, "and I don't want any interference from him."

Even when newsmen requested Lane's reaction to his appointment, Roberts ignored their questions as Lane sat next to him.

"I stated previously," Roberts said as if Lane did not exist yet, "that Mr. Lane is to remain silent until the end of this tournament."

Throughout the news conference, Clifford Roberts never let go of his microphone. He probably won't let go of the Masters either.

Patrick Day Wins First 3 at Big A

By MICHAEL STRAUSS

Eddie Maple was the winning jockey with Tartan's Imminence in yesterday's $38,400 Bed O'Roses Handicap at Aqueduct, but the rider who provided the afternoon's chief conversation piece was 22-year-old Patrick Day. Day, a Coloradan who made his career debut at Aqueduct only six weeks ago after a successful stand at the Fairgrounds in New Orleans, stirred the crowd of 17,888 by booting home the first three winners —Melody Rush ($34.20 for $2), Royal Street ($13.20) and King Hoss ($21.40).

At the Race Tracks

Then the 4-foot-11-inch, 102-pound jockey sat out the next five races while awaiting a ride aboard Hobeau Farms' favored When It Rains in the finale. This time, the Western rider finished second after his mount was leading in the stretch.

Day's second-place finish in the ninth prevented him from matching a performance of five winners in five mounts registered by his father-in-law, Paul J. Bailey, at Belmont Park in June of 1959. Day had won in the finale on Tuesday aboard King's Hoff II ($15.20).

"I really wanted to win with When It Rains," said Day, "because I know my father-in-law would not only have been amazed but also delighted to have me turn in a performance similar to his own of so many years ago at Belmont.

"He was the one who got me to come to New York to ride. Shortly after I married his daughter Debbie last Valentine's Day, he started kidding me about my riding even though I had the third best record at the time at the Fairgrounds.

'If you don't get to ride regularly in New York you're just a bum in the ball park,' he said to me. 'How well you do anywhere else just doesn't matter.'"

At the conclusion of yesterday's program, Day boasted the fifth best winning average (13 percent) in New York's jockey colony. In 97 Aqueduct appearances, he has won 13 times, finished second eight times and third 10.

Maple rated Imminence superbly in the Bed O'Roses. He kept her off the pace during the early going of the mile race and then sent her charging through the stretch on the outside, winning by two lengths.

The gray Tartan performer, sent to the post with her stablemate Land Girl, as the 8-5 favorite, was clocked in 1:35 2-5. Rokeby's Spring Is Here led Land Girl under the wire by 1¼ lengths to gain the runnerup berth.

A disappointing performance was turned in by Montpelier's top-weighted Proud Delta, the 4-year-old filly purchased for $250,000 last October at the dispersal of the Ada L. Rice Stable. Fourth in her previous start last February over the same strip, the daughter of Delta Judge, carrying 122 pounds, finished fifth yesterday, five lengths behind Jacques Wimpfheimer's Shy Dawn.

Proud Delta, who conceded Imminence 7 pounds, showed early speed and led halfway through the backstretch. Thereafter, Heliodoro Gustines was unable to get her to keep pace with her challengers.

Shy Dawn, burdened with 121 pounds and the second choice, started slowly once again and was unable to show enough late speed to provide a threat.

At Yonkers...

Lucien Fontaine, the meeting's leading driver, was fined $500 yesterday by William Dunson, the track's presiding judge. The Canadian driver was charged with "excessively slowing down the first half-mile" while driving Public Opinion in the fourth race last Monday. Public Opinion went on to win.

Dunson said he had levied the fine because "this was the third time at the meeting Fontaine excessively slowed down the field while on the lead."

Fontaine said he planned an appeal.

Each track in New York has a set of standards—for quarter times—depending on the class of horses involved in a race. In the race last Monday, Public Opinion paced wire-to-wire from post position No. 1. He led at every quarter being clocked in 0:31 2/5, 1:04 2/5, 1:36 and 2:06. The sequence apparently under scrutiny, was posted in the second quarter during which the horse paced 33 seconds.

N.Y.R.A.

Patrick Day rides Melody Rush to victory in first race at Aqueduct. Day won the first three races yesterday.

At Freehold...

Herve Filion, the nation's harness driving champion for the last several years, was suspended for 30 days by Freehold Raceway judge William Quercia, for his alleged involvement in a horse drugging incident last Saturday. Filion will continue to race pending an appeal.

Filion was implicated when one of the horses he trains, Darney Dale, tested positive for the depressant, phenothiazine, after winning the first race of the daily double as the 3-2 favorite. A track official said there was no unusual betting on the event.

Filion was held responsible for the horse's condition under the trainer's responsibility rule. A violation calls for an automatic 30-day suspension. Filion has volunteered to take a lie-detector test "to prove I'm not directly responsible for what happened." It was the first time Filion has been suspended.

By MICHAEL KATZ

The Formula One car with "Happy Birthday, America" painted on its red, white and blue nose was withdrawn from international grand prix racing yesterday.

The withdrawal by the Parnelli Jones-Vel Miletich team means that none of the two dozen or so grand prix cars that race on five continents will be built in the United States. And it means that Mario Andretti will have to seek the world driver championship in a foreign car.

It was simply a question of money. Miletich, a wealthy auto and tire dealer, said from the team's Torrance, Calif., headquarters yesterday that more than $3.5 million had been spent on the two-year-old Formula One project, which was designed to have an American driver in an American-designed and built car win the world title.

Miletich said it would cost $400,000 more just to send the Parnelli to the 14 remaining Formula One races. "Only a miracle could influence a change in our decision before the season's next championship race in Spain May 2," he said. "The miracle would be the acquisition of a sponsor."

The team, which also announced it would not resume Formula 5000 racing this year, was hurt financially by the withdrawal of its two major sponsors — Firestone last year and Viceroy this year.

The team will enter a car for Al Unser in the Indianapolis 500 on May 30 and in other United States Auto Club championship events. In the last two years, Unser and Andretti drove for the team in both USAC and Formula 5000 events—in 1975, Andretti was second to Brian Redman for the 5000 title while Unser was third—and Andretti also competed in grand prix events.

Andretti, the 1969 winner, will miss the 500 for the first time in a dozen years. He will be racing that day, instead, in the Grand Prix of Monaco for one of the other grand prix teams.

"More than anything, I want to win the world championship," said the 36-year-old driver who was retired from his two-year contract with the Parnelli team to pursue that dream.

He will drive Sunday for Frank Williams's English team in a nonchampionship Formula One race at Silverstone, England. He also offers to drive for Lotus, the English team for which he has previously appeared, most recently in the season opening Brazilian Grand Prix, and for Shadow, an American team with a car designed and built in England.

"I share the disappointment that is expressed by Vel and Parnelli," said Andretti. "I stuck it out a long time because I, too, had an interest in making an American effort to win a championship."

Grand prix racing, the most glamorous of all auto racing, has long been European dominated, although in recent years Brazil and Argentina have entered the heavily nationalistic competition which stressed that such cars was so nationalistic some governments sponsored cars.

But though Miletich and even Andretti will be entertaining prospective sponsors at the recent United States Grand Prix West at Long Beach, Calif., the Parnelli is unable to compete.

The Parnelli's withdrawal leaves only Shadow drivers and Jean-Pierre Jarier of France and Tom Pryce of Wales and Penske's team, with Mark Donahue as driver, as the only American entries in Formula One. The Penske, which was developed in part by Roger Penske, is a British-built car.

The only American on the circuit besides Andretti remains Brett Lunger, who has a ride with the Penske team.

Elmo Wright Signed

The Giants signed a free-agent wide receiver, Elmo Wright, a former No. 1 draft pick of the Kansas City Chiefs.

Wright, who played at the University of Houston, was drafted in 1971 and had 26 receptions for 528 yards and three touchdowns in winning honors as the Chiefs' outstanding first-year player.

Wright was bothered by injuries the next two seasons and played out his option in his fourth year. He was with the Houston Oilers and the New England Patriots last year, but was used sparingly by both clubs.

Columbia Netmen Get On-Court Lessons

By CHARLES FRIEDMAN

George (Butch) Seewagen, the 29-year-old Columbia tennis coach who was once ranked 14th in the country, still competes in tournaments. And he still is serious on the court, especially when he faces one of his varsity players.

At Forest Hills one year, the luck of the draw pitted the coach against Henry Bunis, his No. 1 player. Seewagen was the winner. Last Sunday, in the final of the Hastings Cup in Westchester, he walloped Jon Molin, a top Lion, 6-0, 6-1.

"It was closer than the score indicated," said the lanky coach. "But I was determined to go all out because I felt Jon had the ability to win. I think I was lucky in that I made only about five errors."

Is it psychological warfare when coach meets pupil?

"I don't think so," said Seewagen. "We're both competitors. There was no thought in my mind of easing up, despite the score. I wouldn't have the respect of my players if I did that."

Seewagen, who was taught to play by his father, longtime pro at the North Shore club in Bayside, Queens, went on to become an all-American at Rice University. He is one of the few New Yorkers to earn a high national ranking. Now in his seventh year as Columbia's coach, he brought the Lions their first Ivy title in 1972 and repeated in 1973.

A hip ailment ended his hopes of making the big-money tours, but he plans to keep playing in local events. Meanwhile, his team lost to Yale, 7-2, in its opening spring meet. In a heavy weekend at home, the Lions battle Dartmouth tomorrow, Harvard on Saturday and Brown on Sunday. Spectators are welcome to see the matches at the picturesque Columbia Tennis Center at Baker Field.

The annual Eastern men's indoor championship is under way at the Stadium T.C. in the Bronx, with John Paish the No. 1 favorite. Paish, who comes from Britain, has made a reputation here as a player and teaching pro. He leads the point standing in Port Washington's prize-money Festival of Tournaments. He is married to the former Wendy Gilchrist, also a ranking player.

There is good and bad news in the senior ranks. Sid Schwartz, the powerful left-hander who came out of the Brooklyn parks to achieve world ranking in the 1950's, is now eligible for the 45's division. He made his debut by reaching the final of the Hastings Cup. Al Doyle, the little River Club pro and the country's top-ranking 55er, has undergone surgery at Memorial Hospital on York Avenue. Whether he'll pay again is uncertain.

New clubs mean new tournaments. The Atlantic Beach (L.I.) Tennis Center, opening next month with 13 Har-Tru courts, will be host to three Eastern Tennis Association events in the summer—the senior women's doubles championship and the regional championships for boys and girls 16 years and under.

Speaking of juniors, Donna Rubin and Stacy Bowman stunned the Hastings tournament by winning the women's doubles. John McEnroe and Peter Rennert are top-seeded in the Concord Hotel's annual tournament starting today at the Catskill resort. The event precedes the Easter Bowl championships next Wednesday through Sunday.

FOREIGN AMATEUR (1)

Priscilo Gonzalez Diniz, Brazil.

He has three children, ranging in age from 18 to 24, and he studied at Georgia Tech and the University of Tennessee.

The 13th hole is a dogleg left, with Rae's Creek running along the left side of the fairway and then cutting in in front of the green. It is part of the so-called Amen Corner — the other holes are the par-4 11th and the par-3 12th—where many a player has won or lost the Masters.

The Amen Corner is in a low-lying section where the winds swirl constantly in the pines.

Roberts said that in recent years the hole had been yielding too many eagles. Therefore, the tee was moved back 10 yards.

Every few years it also is necessary to rebuild the green because of the damage caused by drainage problems. In this year's rebuilding, the original two-tier configuration, which had eroded, was restored. The green also was extended to the left rear, making a new—and difficult—pin placement possible.

This will be the first time the Masters will settle a tie, if there is one, with a sudden-death playoff.

No Extra Day

Roberts said this was a good trend because the golfing public wanted a winner in the Sunday finale instead of in an 18-hole play off the next day.

He referred to the disaster of the Florida Citrus open at Orlando on March 7 where, because of a rigid schedule imposed by NBC Sports, a Monday playoff ran out of daylight and hadto be resumed the next morning. That, Roberts said, was "doubly anticlimactic."

To protect a possible Masters playoff, Roberts said, tee times on Sunday would start somewhat earlier than usual, "just to have a little reserve."

The last two days of the tournament will be televised by Roberts emphasized that television would not have the influence in scheduling here that it does in regular events on the pro tour.

"The TV people do not dictate how to run this tournament," Roberts said. "It's their job to report it, and it's our job to run it properly."

Today on the golf course was devoted to casual practice, with no scores posted. Most players know the course well, and what they most want to observe is how the greens are playing.

Nicklaus found the greens a trifle slow, but he noted that if the present winds continue, the greens would become harder and the course would "play faster." That means, he said, a bunch of low scores, as in the closing days of the 1975 tournament, when Hale Irwin shot 64 and Johnny Miller 66.

The Masters is not exactly a fun place, but it does have a few light moments. One of them today was the annual tournament over the nine-hole minicourse outside the clubhouse. The winner was Jay Haas, an amateur, who shot 21, six under par.

SHIFT INTO SKYHAWK

IF YOU ORDER ONE BEFORE APRIL 30TH, YOU GET A 5-SPEED MANUAL TRANSMISSION OR A TURBO HYDRA-MATIC TRANSMISSION AT NO EXTRA CHARGE.

Which can save you $244 (manufacturer's suggested retail price). And any time you can save that kind of money these days, you're doing rather nicely.
There's one more thing about the offer you should know. If you don't choose to get the deal on the 5-speed or the automatic, you still can do pretty well. Because Buick dealers and salesmen are also being given special incentives to give you a good deal on Skyhawks equipped with the standard 4-speed.
In any case, if you've had your eye on Buick's free-spirited little 1976 Skyhawk, it sure is a good time to do something about it.
Just hot-foot it down to your Buick dealer's. After all, April 30 isn't all that far off.

TEACHER'S INTRODUCES AN INEXPENSIVE WAY TO BUY EXPENSIVE SCOTCH.

We've just given Teacher's Scotch something in common with a lot of lesser scotches.

A lesser price.

But while we've reduced our quarts and half gallons, we haven't reduced what's inside them.

It's still the same great taste that's distilled, blended and bottled in Scotland. The taste you paid more for.

Only now you can get it for the price you would pay for an ordinary scotch.

Which makes it an extraordinary buy.

2 Old New Yorkers Toast of Town Again

Two Hall of Fame members from different sports, Whitey Ford of the New York Yankees, and Sugar Ray Robinson, the former world welterweight and middleweight boxing champion, will be honored as outstanding New York athletes at the 50th dinner of the Boys' Athletic League at the Plaza Hotel, April 27.

Ford, born in midtown Manhattan in 1928 and raised in Astoria, Queens, pitched 16 years for the Yankees and posted a 236-106 won-lost record. The left-handed pitcher also won 10 World Series games.

Robinson, born in Detroit as Walker Smith, came to New York as a child. He boxed in the Boys' Athletic League tournaments and the Golden Gloves before turning professional. He won the 147-pound title in 1947 and the 160-pound crown in 1951. Over all, Robinson won 175 fights, lost 19 and fought 6 draws. He scored 109 knockouts.

The husband-and-wife running team of Mark Lutz and Francie Larrieu has been added to the list of competitors for the Kansas Relays, April 15-17, at Lawrence. Lutz, a former University of Kansas star who now runs for the Pacific Coast Club, will compete in the open 100-meter and 200-meter dashes. His wife, who holds the women's world outdoor record in the mile and the women's American indoor mark for the distance, will compete in the women's open 800-meter run. They were married early last year. Both now attend Long Beach State.

Boxing experts have heard brash predictions from many fighters and that calls to mind the classic "Yeah, but can he fight?" Richard Dunn, who has a date with Muhammad Ali for the world heavyweight title in Munich, May 24, fits the pattern.

Dunn said, "In the long run, I don't care if I get knocked out in two rounds, but I can assure you that sparks will fly on the way."

Then the square-jawed Briton added, "I am going in there to fight. Whatever I get, I intend to earn it."

Dunn, a former construction worker from Yorkshire, will visit New York next week to appear with Ali on a television talk show. But the European champion would rather talk of his early career of bar-room brawls in Halifax. "Fun it was," said Dunn. "Find a bar, find a fight—fists, feet, the lot."

Patrick Depailler, a French auto racing driver, was suspended for three races by the Renault sports-car team after being involved in a crash that knocked both Renault cars out of the world championship race at the Nuerbuergring in West Germany last Sunday.

Depailler was trying to pass his teammate, Jean-Pierre Jabouille, on the second turn, just over a mile from the start of the 180-mile race. Depailler lost control and crashed, then Jabouille crashed trying to avoid Depailler. The drivers had been under orders not to contest the lead among themselves. The week before, James Hunt blamed Depailler for the crash that eliminated the English driver from the United States Grand Prix West at Long Beach, Calif.

Old hockey players never die, they just melt away with the ice. Gordie Howe, the 48-year-old player with the Houston Aeros, is undecided about continuing his World Hockey Association career next season. "Let's say it's 80-20 I retire, but I'm hedging a bit. Remember last year at this time I said I was retiring." Howe scored his 32d goal Tuesday night in the Aeros' 8-5 victory over Phoenix. That gave him 102 points for the season. "That 100 points and 30-goal season answers the question 'Was I helping the club?'" Howe said. It was the third time in Howe's 28 years of pro hockey he accumulated 100 points or more.

The Atlanta Braves obtained Terry Crowley, a first baseman, from Cincinnati in exchange for Mike Thompson, a pitcher, and asked waivers on John (Blue Moon) Odom for the purpose of giving the 12-year veteran his unconditional release. Rick Camp, another pitcher, was purchased by the Braves from their Richmond farm club after his impressive showing in spring training. Camp is a 22-year-old right-hander.

Mike Marshall, the Dodgers' curmudgeon, normally shies away from signing autographs, feeling they lack importance. When a youngster approached the pitcher in Mesa, Ariz., Marshall began to lecture him and said if he really wanted something of value, he should ask for his teacher's autographs.

The youngster replied, "All I want is a signed baseball. I don't really put any importance on your autograph."

"Under those conditions," Marshall said, "I'll sign."

David Schmeltzer, a former track star at City College, has been named coach of the Beavers' outdoor track team. Schmeltzer, a 1971 graduate, holds the college's records in the 50 and 120 yard high hurdles and the javelin throw and was also a member of the quartet who set the college mark in the 880-yard relay.

Bonds Out for 3 Weeks

ANAHEIM, Calif., April 7 (UPI) — Bobby Bonds, the hard-hitting California Angels' outfielder, suffered a chip fracture on his right hand x-rays showed today, and will be out of action for about three weeks.

The x-ray showed a fracture at the distal end of the third metacarpal, but Dr. Julion Taleisnik, an orthopedic specialist, said there was no need for surgery. Bonds, who was acquired by the Angels from the New York Yankees, hurt the hand sliding into home plate last Friday night in an exhibition game against the Los Angeles Dodgers. The hand was put in a cast for 10 days. After the cast is removed, Bonds will have to wear a plint for an additonal week. He was put on the disabled list.

The Angels also announced the purchase of the contract of a Philadelphia pitcher, Wayne Simpson, for their Salt Lake City team of the Pacific Coast League. He had a 12-7 record with a 2.17 earned run average for Toledo last season.

Orioles Sign Palmer

BALTIMORE, April 7 (AP) —Jim Palmer, the American League's Cy Young Award winning pitcher in two of the last three seasons, signed a three-year contract today with the Baltimore Orioles.

Contract terms were not announced, but Palmer was believed to have received a substantial increase over his estimated $135,000 salary of 1975.

The 30-year-old Palmer posted a 23-11 won-lost record last season while leading the major leagues with a 2.09 earned-run average and 10 shutouts. He allowed six or fewer hits in 13 games and notched his third career one-hitter. Bouncing back from a 7-12 record in 1974, when he was bothered with a sore elbow, Palmer pitched a club record 323 innings last year, hurled 25 complete games and struck out 193. Four of his losses were by one run and two others by two runs. Palmer also won the Cy Young Award in 1973 when he had a 22-9 record and a 2.40 E.R.A.

Palmer will pitch in Baltimore's season opener at home Friday against the defending American League champion Boston Red Sox.

Blues' Defenseman Hurt

ST. LOUIS April (UPI) — The St. Louis Blues said today that Bob Hess would be out of action for 10 days with a hairline fracture of the ankle. The defenseman suffered the injury when a puck hit his ankle in last night's 5-2 victory over the Buffalo Sabres.

son right now, as long as he were playing in it.

"I'm feeling pretty bad, I don't want to talk," said Davis, who signed with the Yankees as a free agent Feb. 20 after the Baltimore Orioles had released him.

For an hour after he had received the news, first from Gabe Paul, the Yankee president, and then Martin, Davis sat on a table outside the dugout at Fort Lauderdale Stadium. Then he went back into the clubhouse, sat in front of his locker for a while and finally took a long shower.

"I'm going to stay here a couple of days, do a little soul-searching," said the Brooklyn native, who has amassed two National League batting titles and 2,058 hits in 16 seasons with seven major league clubs. "I'm not thinking right now. My mind's a little blank."

He put on his brown slacks and long-sleeve brown shirt and declined to say anything more.

"Why should a guy say something he doesn't really want to say," he remarked softly, "something he'll feel sorry for later."

Davis, the American League's premier designated hitter since the inception of the new category three years ago, figured to be the Yankees' right-handed dh this season. However, he had bone chips removed from an ankle last October and didn't move or swing well in the brief training period.

"I can always swing a bat," he had said earlier in the spring. "I just hope they have patience."

The Yankees' patience, however, ran out because they had a pitching problem. Two pitchers, Dave Pagan and Ken Brett, had no options left and Martin decided to carry 10 pitchers on the roster instead of nine.

"We've been talking to other clubs," the manager explained, "and they're waiting to see what we're going to do with our pitchers. Tommy is a victim of circumstances. In order to get what we need to help us, we have to hold onto our pitchers."

Translated, that means the Yankees would still like to find a shortstop and would trade a pitcher for one. That's the reason for carrying the 10th pitcher now.

When Fred Stanley arrived in camp three weeks ago, he didn't think the Yankees needed another shortstop, and he still doesn't. He thought he had the job to himself, but now Martin has decided to use him against left-handed pitchers and Jim Mason against right-handers. That's why Mason will be in tomorrow's lineup.

"I'll use Stanley a lot in the latter part of a game for defense," the manager explained. "I like his glove and his range. But Mason's been playing good down here. He's shown me that he's more aggressive than in the past. He's swinging the bat better. I'll try this for a while and if it doesn't work out, I'll go back to Stanley as my regular shortstop."

Stanley, who has been struggling for a steady job in the majors since 1969, got the news from Martin while two outsiders were in the manager's office.

"There were a couple of things I wanted to say," the 28-year-old Stanley who batted .391 this spring, said later, "but I couldn't in front of you guys. I've been reading that I had the job unless I lost it. But I told the guys I would believe it April 5. I just wonder how many left-handers will pitch against us."

Martin knew how Stanley would feel about the semide-motion. He simply concluded that you can't please everyone and set his thinking toward the season.

"We didn't have too much time down here," he said, "but the players generally have the idea of what I want. We've been aggressive and sometimes we've been overaggressive or foolishly aggressive. But you have to do that to break away from the other way of doing things.

"The key to our season is pitching. If the pitching comes through like I think it will, we'll win. And I'm hoping Elliott [Maddox] gets back soon. He can really help us defensively."

Martin said he had tried to impress on his players the importance of constructive criticism among themselves.

"Not from the coaches or the manager, but between the players," he explained.

It doesn't necessarily follow, though, that if you have that, you have a pennant.

About the Mets and Yankees . . .

Chris Chambliss's bases-loaded single drove in the winning run in the 10th inning, as the Yankees won their fourth of five games with the Mets this spring and, overall, their 32d victory over the Mets against 21 defeats. . . . John Milner and Jerry Grote hit homers for the Mets, who finished the spring with a 4-11 record. The Yankees, who were 10-7, sent Ron Guidry, Scott McGregor and Rick Sawyer, pitchers, to the minors; the Mets optioned Nino Espinosa, pitcher, and Jack Heidemann, infielder, to the minors. . . . Willie Randolph, starting second baseman who batted .292, received the James P. Dawson Memorial Award as the best rookie in the Yankee camp.

Confident Reds to Open Season Today

cause it could have been prevented if he had come down [to Florida] and worked out like the other pitchers did while the negotiations were going on."

Gullett, who earlier had been expected to start the season opener but now has given way to Nolan, is the only Red who has not signed a contract.

He's High on Nolan

But Anderson is happy about Nolan, calling his progress the club's "most pleasant surprise. Never once this spring has he given me any indication that he's experiencing tightness in his arm or shoulder," the manager said. "That's a first since I took over as manager in 1970."

Anderson also said he was "thrilled with the attitude and confidence" of George Foster and Ken Griffey, the starting outfielders.

"It's not arrogance—they have assurance," he said. "Both of them are strong men. The way Foster has come along, his capabilities are boundless."

As for the bench, Anderson calls it "the strongest since I took over the club."

"Mike Lum is an even better player than I thought he was before we acquired him [from Atlanta]," said Anderson. "Our bench is balanced. We have hitters in Dan Driessen, Bob Bailey and Lum, and we have runners in Ed Armbrister, Joel Youngblood and Driessen. We have one of the best defensive infielders around in Doug Flynn."

Sunny Skies Forecast

The Reds have already announced they have sold all seats for the game, and standing room tickets will go on sale tomorrow morning.

DRIVES FOR SCORE: Earl Monroe of the Knicks in action against the Braves' Randy Smith in Buffalo on Tuesday night. Monroe scored 33 points in 106-102 victory.

Orr Is Waiting for Gold Rush

Orr performed spectacularly in only 10 games during the regular season that just ended. He joined the club in November, when it was floundering. He amassed 18 points in 10 games, then reinjured a knee and underwent the fifth operation of his career.

It is a career that saw him win a Norris Trophy as the top defenseman for eight straight seasons until his latest injury.

He was the first defender to score more than 20 goals in a season (his season record of 46 is 15 more than any other defenseman has scored). Before Orr broke in, the season mark for points by a defenseman was 61. His total is 139.

But he has bad knees and his future, at the age of 28, is uncertain.

"When the new owners took over the Bruins last year, they used Bobby as leverage in getting the franchise," charged Eagleson. "They told the N.H.L. they would sign Bobby and keep him from going to the W.H.A."

Eagleson contended that the new owners, the Jacobs brothers of Buffalo, who operate food concessions in stadiums, originally offered Orr $4 million to play 10 years.

"After Bobby got injured in training camp, they changed the offer to $2.4 million for five years," said Eagleson. "And after he reinjured the knee they offered $1.75 million for five years, $350,000 a year. But they said they wouldn't pay if he was injured and he couldn't play out the contract. That's when we said goodbye."

Some people around the league are not so sanguine about Orr's future as Eagleson is.

One owner, who asked that he not be identified, said that he had heard "from many sources" that Orr's knees are so questionable as to virtually negate a deal.

"How would I feel if I got Bobby and then in the middle of the season lost him? I'd go crazy," said the owner.

Unfortunately for Orr's bargaining position, the Bruins finished first in their division without him, even though he did spark them in his brief appearance this season.

Yet, if his contract is upheld, and if no compensation is necessary, then he would be very attractive to most clubs. They wouldn't have to give up either money or a player or a draft choice to acquire him.

It appears, in fact, as if Orr no longer will play in Boston if he is, as Eagleson contends, "another Catfish Hunter."

Nets Top Squires, 127-123, in Finale

NORFOLK, Va., April 7 (AP)—The New York Nets opened up a 25-point lead in the third quarter, then withstood a furious Virginia comeback and beat the Squires, 127-123, in the regular-season finale for the two American Basketball Association teams.

Julius Erving and Brian Taylor combined for 60 points for the winners, who will advance to the playoffs Friday night against the San Antonio Spurs.

Virginia, finishing its season with professional basketball's worst won-lost record —15-68—did not make the playoffs.

Erving went on an 18-point scoring surge in the second quarter as the Nets moved into a 74-57 halftime lead, then widened their lead to 91-66 late in the third period before the Squires came to life.

Led by the scoring of a reserve, Ticky Burden, and a guard, Mack Calvin, the Squires outscored the Nets, 41-27, in the final stanza to make the contest close. Erving, however, had gone to the bench in the third quarter and did not play the fourth.

Erving led all scorers with 38 points, while Taylor chipped in with 22 and Al Skinner got 17.

Burden tallied 26 points to pace Virginia scoring for the 27th time this season. Calvin scored 22 points and Mike Jackson had 19.

The Nets finished their season with a mark of 55-29, three fewer victories than they enjoyed during the 1974-75 regular season.

Fiscal Board Chief Scores 'Unrealistic' City U. Plan

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

The staff director of the Emergency Financial Control Board accused the Board of Higher Education yesterday of creating "a desperate situation" by failing to produce a realistic budget-cutting plan and by "provoking" City University faculty members and students to resist austerity controls.

"They are nowhere near having met the city financial plan," said Stephen Berger, the Control Board's executive, in denouncing the board's newly adopted dollar-cutting plan, which is $76 million out of balance in the coming year, by the university's estimate.

"They have got their heads in the sand and by not facing reality they continue to cut options for all of us," said Mr. Berger.

Zuccotti Meeting Slated

As executive of the Control Board, which is the state panel charged with seeing that the city restores budget balance, Mr. Berger said he intended to meet today with First Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti on what to do next about the City University problem.

"Somebody is going to have to create a plan for them," Mr. Berger said in an interview. "The Board of Higher Education's idea of a plan is to get to the next day."

However, a spokesman for Alfred A. Giardino, the chairman of the Board of Higher Education, replied by denying Mr. Berger's contention and stressing Mr. Giardino's previous complaint that the university was being ordered to make drastic reforms without being told how much future state and city aid would be extended. He likened this to rebuilding a house in darkness with no indication of the available building materials.

When the board approved its austerity plan, which includes the closing or merger of several colleges, Mr. Giardino argued that it was only proper for the state and city to supply extra aid to maintain the university. He accused state and city officials of treating the university as a political "Ping-Pong ball," and he contended that if such unpopular economies as extensive tuition were approaching, "then let the politicians make the decision."

But Mr. Berger and city officials have sought for weeks to have the university board set the full austerity plan, and two weeks ago the Control Board endorsed Mayor Beame's order that put monthly limits on the city's subsidy to the university.

"From the [university] board's action the other night, you'd never know that they face an immediate cash crisis," Mr. Berger said, referring to a potential expenditure overrun this year that city budget officials said could be as high as $70 million.

The university issue is something of a three-cornered political problem, with the city and the university demanding more money from the state, which has its own austerity drive under way.

At the same time, state and city officials want the university trustees to prescribe the full range of unpopular economies needed to cover a budget cut mandated on the semi-independent university by City Hall officials, who are cutting university subsidies to help reduce the city budget's huge deficit.

Mr. Berger contends that the college cuts and mergers approved earlier this week are at best "one very small first step." The university board's basic reaction, he charged, has been to "scream, yell, jump up and down."

"They have provoked students and faculty to a fever pitch over secondary issues," he asserted. "Survival is the first issue."

University officials and other critics maintain, however, that there is a real limit to the level of cuts that can be imposed, and some contend that the city's minority groups will bear an unfairly large burden.

Mayor Beame's office said he would have no immediate comment on the university issue until he had studied the board's latest plan fully.

In a separate fiscal gathering, the Economic Development Council, a group of 200 business leaders, heard its chairman, George Champion, caution that the city government needed drastic managment reform if it was to survive the fiscal crisis.

"Until the city gets more efficient managment, from top to bottom, there is no way in which the downward economic spiral can be reversed," Mr. Champion told the council over a lamb-chop luncheon at the University Club.

The gathering in the handsome quiet of the club on Fifth Avenue provided evidence of the business community's fresh concern for the city budget, both in the council's continuing task force studies of urban problems, and in the casual chatter of members.

One executive eyeing his ice cream soon moved from personal observations ("You can still get a square meal at the Ritz in Paris") to discussions of the city's welfare problem and new transit contract.

"I figure the transit thing was swept under the rug until July," he said to a companion.

KIBBEE IS WARNED ABOUT FISCAL PLAN

2 on Board Say They'll Call for Him to Quit if He Offers No Proposal to Close Gap

By JUDITH CUMMINGS

Two members of the Board of Higher Education said yesterday they that they would call for the resignation of Dr. Robert J. Kibbee, chancellor of City University, unless he produced specific recommendations to resolve the university's fiscal crisis.

The board adopted a controversial plan last Monday for trimming the university's scale along lines proposed by Dr. Kibbee, although it was acknowledged that the plan called for spending $76 million more than the university expected to receive next year.

The announcement by the two board members, Gurston D. Goldin and Harold M. Jacobs, was the first public sign of what is reported within the university to be a growing private rift between the chancellor and some members of the board over the handling of the fiscal crisis.

"Failure on the part of the university administration to submit specific recommendations for closing the acknowledged fiscal gap would be a dereliction of duty, and the board would have no choice but to seek new management," Dr. Goldin said.

He and Mr. Jacobs said they would call for Dr. Kibbee's resignation in 10 days if plans were not presented by then.

Information Held Inadequate

Some board members are reported to feel that information from the chancellor's office on which to base their decisions has been inadequate or too slow in coming. Others say savings planned in Dr. Kibbee's original proposals were diluted by modifications by the board, a lay citizens' panel.

Efforts to reach Dr. Kibbee for comment were unsuccessful.

In reply to a sharply worded "request" by Dr. Goldin at Monday's board meeting that he supply such information, Dr. Kibbee said that he had "done what I was asked to do," which he said was to produce a plan "that could be used as a basis for negotiation with the state for funding."

Mr. Jacobs said in addition that he was "outraged" over the possibility of further cuts in student programs. He called for Dr. Kibbee to appoint a task force to cut out what he charged were excess personnel in the university's administration—such as public relations offices at each of the 19 colleges—and to curtail alleged abuses by faculty members who he charged often hold significant outside jobs.

In another development yesterday, Irwin Polishook, a vice president of the Professional Staff Congress, the faculty union, predicted there would be no payless furlough of faculty members and staff next week as provided for in a board resolution.

Progress Reported

Mr. Polishook said that progress had been made in negotiations between the union and the board, and with representatives of the city and state that could "probably" avert any furlough or closing of facilities next week.

The board passed a resolution last month making such an action possible if needed as an economy measure.

The president of City College declared that he would keep Cohen Library open next week, the Easter recess, regardless of any board decision. The president, Robert E. Marshak, has said he would consider it "an immoral action" to close the library, the major research site on the campus.

24 New York Executives Tell Panel Why They Prefer City Despite Wo

By MARTIN TOLCHIN

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 7—Two dozen New York City businessmen told Congress today that the city's role, as what one of them called "the center of the action," far outweighed what they considered onerous local taxes and a lack of amenities.

Most of the businessmen said they planned to remain in the city indefinitely. Most also called on the Federal Government to assume a greater share of the city's fiscal burden, and specifically urged a Federal takeover of welfare.

"The Newmont Mining Corporation has just decided to stay in New York City," Philip Walsh, the company's vice president, told a hearing convened by Representative Peter A. Peyser, Republican of Westchester County, N.Y., and a candidate for his party's Senate nomination.

Like many other witnesses, Mr. Walsh cited "the intellectual stimulation of New York City, the coming around the table of so many interesting people."

"New York City is the international headquarters of world business in the United States," Mr. Walsh added. "It's the center of the action."

But he cited complaints expressed by several of the others, including those on taxes and commuting woes. "Many of the men who run these businesses live in Connecticut or New Jersey," he said, "and they see their neighbors earning a lot more than they do on the same gross income, because of the New York State income tax."

James J. Needham, chairman of the New York Stock Exchange, said that despite the stock-transfer tax, which he considered onerous, and suggestions that the exchange be located outside New York City, "the board of directors has not considered that proposition even once in the last year."

New Formulas Urged

Mr. Needham urged that Federal formulas be revised "to restore equity and reflect current conditions," that the Federal Government acknowledge responsibility and that Federal responsibility and that federally owned buildings in the city be placed on the tax rolls.

Mr. Needham expressed disappointment that of the 11 New York State Congressmen who drifted in and out of the hearings, only four were from New York City.

"Some of us inconvenienced ourselves to be here, and disappointed that they were here," he said after he te

Representative Jam Delaney, Queens Democ chairman of the state a delegations of New Yor did not attend the h said that "Peter Peyser on his own, for politic sons," adding, "it was authorized meetings to h himself."

Bernard Garil of Oppe and Company asked good is it being loyal York and forced out ness?"

Drop in Market Is Linked to Dispatch

A press dispatch that described a Washington meeting of New York City business executives to discuss the city's future contributed to a sharp drop in stock prices late yesterday.

The news item originated from United Press International and was carried shortly before 2 P.M. on the Dow Jones news service, whose thousands of tickers are watched constantly by brokers and investors across the country.

"New York City business leaders," the item began, "painted a gloomy picture for the future of the city—a complete turnabout from the optimistic appraisal city and state officials gave Congress last week."

United Press International went on to say that officials from the New York Stock Exchange, Citibank and American Express, among others, had told New York City Congressmen that the city was not curing its economic woes and would eventually be forced to default.

At 1:30 P.M., the Dow Jones industrial average was down less than 3 points, but shortly after 2 P.M. selling pressure intensified and the blue-chip market indicator finished with a sharp loss of more than 15 points at 986.22.

The U.P.I. said last night that it had no comment on its article.

Hope in City Voiced

At the meeting in Washington a number of business executives said they planned to remain in New York City indefinitely and called upon the Federal Government to assume a greater role in shouldering the city's financial burden.

After the stock-market closed, a spokesman for American Express, which opened a new $60 million headquarters building in New York City recently, noted that its decision to stay in the city represented "an act of faith in New York's ability to remain one of the world's pre-eminent centers of art and commerce."

But the damage was done as far as the stock market was concerned yesterday. In its night lead for the market, U.P.I. cited "a gloomy forecast for New York City's fiscal future" as the reason for the sharp drop in stock prices.

By nightfall, The Associated Press, too, took up the same theme. It said "some pessimistic talk" about the city's fiscal problems "might have contributed to the selling" on Wall Street.

By that time, the Dow Jones news service also had incorporated the U. P. I. report in its late stock-market comment that was carried on tickers about 4:30 P.M.

It said that the decline in stock prices "accelerated following news that New York City business leaders told New York Congressmen that despite Federal loans the city isn't curing its economic problems and will eventually be forced to default."

Shopping Mall Is Planned for Jamaica

lopment Corporation, a nonprofit alliance of business and civic leaders that has been working for nearly a decade to revive the agging fortunes of a neighborhood that has declined in the face offsuburban growth and competition from newer commercial centers in Queens, estimates that 1,900 permanent jobs will be added upon completion of the mall in late 1977 and that by 1980 the retail sales in Jamaica will rise nearly 30 percent.

Hopes for the Future

Borough President Donald R. Manes said the new retail facility would spur several other efforts to rebuild Jamaica that have been languishing during the years of recession and municipal austerity.

Noting that the long-promised domolition of the creaky Jamaica Avenue elevated structure would begin this summer and that work had already started on a pedestrian plaza along 165th Street, Mr. Manes said the city was "clearly demonstrating a multifaceted effort that has the united encouragement of the entire borough."

Office Construction Delayed

A number of other improvements have been projected for Jamaica, but of these only the new Archer Avenue subway line, which will have a station a half block from the Jamaica mall, is actually under construction.

A new campus for York College, whose future as a four-year institution is being contested in City University budget deliberations, is staked out on a sprawling site directly south of the mall across the Long Island Rail Road right-of-way. Construction of the campus cannot proceed until the state finds a way to re-enter the bond market after it resolves its current fiscal crisis. Mr. Manes said York College had "first priority" when funds for college expansion were available again.

New office buildings, a prime ingredient of the planned revival of Jamaica, have so far remained on the drawing board. The city has acquired 10 acres of land along Archer Avenue and has leased space to developers.

A major office project planned several years ago by Harry B. Helmsley, owner of the Empire State Building and numerous other city properties, has yet to attract financing or prospective tenants.

Jamaica business interests, acting through the Greater Jamaica Development Corporation, succeeded earlier this year in persuading city planning officials to delay permission for construction of new office buildings in Rego Park for several years. They argued that the substantial commitment of city funds to the rehabilitation of Jamaica would be harmed by any further commercial enhancement of Rego Park through zoning accommodations.

Jamaica Mall, scheduled for completion late next year, will be financed through construction loans obtained by Corland, the developer. Bruce Jacobi, president of Corland, said at the news conference that discussions with prospective retail tenants had indicated sufficient interest to proceed immediately with the project.

Harold K. Bell, a professor of urban planning at Columbia University who served as realty consultant to the Greater Jamaica Development Corporation, said that demolition of the elevated line east of Queens Boulevard was a prime consideration in the decision to go ahead with the mall.

Manufacturers Hanover Trust has provided $1.5 million in credits for acquisition of land for the mall site, carried on quietly over the last two years. The bank also made a grant of $150,000 to the nonprofit development corporation.

John F. McGillicuddy, president of the bank, would not commit Manufacturers Hanover yesterday to a construction loan for the project, but he indicated willingness to do so when Corland produced enough letters of intent from retailers wanting space in the mall.

The effort to reverse Jamaica's downward course over the last decade and more has enlisted an impressive array of public and private support. The Fund for the City of New York, a division of the Ford Foundation, paid for administrative and technical assistance. The Regional Plan Association, another nonprofit organization, provided extensive research and spearheaded a political fight to gain governmental support for the rehabilitation of Jamaica.

Vincent M. Albanese, chairman of the development corporation, said the community had never sought to hide the fact that "Jamaica has problems—reflected in old buildings as well as changing social conditions."

Thus, he said, "we have a partnership between government and private business here and we think this assures that the debilitating influences on Jamaica will soon be abated."

The design plan for the Jamaica Mall was prepared by the architectural firm of Gruzen & Partners, urban design consultants. Mr. Jacobi said that an architect for the mall building would be selected shortly.

Beame Assures City Workers They'll Get Delayed Pay Rises

Mayor Beame stressed yesterday that the city would honor its commitment to lift in September a one-year wage freeze that city employees had voluntarily accepted.

The money for the deferred wage increases—the amount has not yet been estimated—will be in the budget for the next fiscal year, which begins July 1, the Mayor said.

This was the one ray of hope as the Mayor, surrounded by top fiscal aides, began the annual budget retreat, working toward the submission on April 15 of what Mr. Beame called the "toughest budget we ever had in terms of cuts."

The Mayor said the budget for 1976-77, for which he has proposed $379 million in cuts, would "not be far from" the current budget of $12.3 billion. Under the State Emergency Financial Control Board's three-year plan to wipe out the city's deficit, the city must make cuts totaling $821 million in the next two years.

"This is going to be the most austere budget the city has ever operated under," the Mayor said.

During a lull in questions by newsmen, Mr. Beame looked around the 12th-floor Municipal Building office of Budget Director Donald Kummerfeld and said softly: "What is this—a morgue?"

He said the next budget "will have to be balanced with certain financial methods, but it will show how the deficit is going to be financed."

A 6 percent wage increase for city employees went into effect last July, 1. The increases were paid through Sept. 1, when the freeze took hold. At the time Mayor Beame said the city would save $107 million by the one-year wage deferral.

It was a graduated wage freeze, with workers earning less than $10,000 giving up 2 percent of their raise. Those earning between $10,000 and $15,000 gave up 4 percent, and those earning more than $15,000 gave up the entire 6 percent.

Cockfight Curb Passes

WASHINGTON, April 7 (AP)—The Senate completed today Congressional action on an animal welfare bill that includes a ban on cockfighting in most states. A 91-to-0 vote sent the bill to the White House. The compromise version of the bill exempts cockfight in those states and territories where they are now legal.

British to Sell Gas to U.S.

LONDON, April 7 (AP)—A British subsidiary of Shell Oil has landed a big 10-year contract to sell liquified gas from the North Sea to the United States. Shell International Gas said it expected the contract to be worth $1 billion, with deliveries to begin in 1979. The company said about six million tons of liquified propane and butane gas would be sold to Northern Liquid Fuels International of Omaha, Neb., a subsidiary of Northern Natural Gas of Nebraska.

chairman of Holiday Inns Inc., and Mr. Johnson, who is 74 and vice chairman, have stepped in on numerous occasions over the last five years to bail Alodex out. The most recent example was the sale two weeks ago of 1.1 million shares of their Holiday Inns stock. The sale netted about $16 million, most of which will be used to pay off Alodex debts.

Alodex's problems became apparent shortly after it was reorganized as a national company rather than a Memphis area operation.

In 1969 Mr. Clark, a well known building contractor, approached Mr. Johnson with a proposal to merge his operations into those of Alodex. Mr. Wilson eventually accepted the idea. As part of the expansion, Alodex stock was offered for sale to the public.

Under Mr. Clark, who left Alodex in 1973, the company expanded from single-family residential work to construction of turn-key housing for government agencies and big projects, none of which included provisions to cover cost increases. The company also expanded into construction of condominiums and multifamily units.

Problems appeared in the summer of 1971, a few months after a public offer of Alodex stock. The prospectus did not make clear

DOW PLUNGES 15.43 IN HASTY RETREAT

Sharpest Drop in Nearly 4 Weeks Jolts Glamour and Blue Chip Stock List

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN

Stock prices registered their biggest drop in nearly four weeks yesterday as the Dow Jones industrial average plunged more than 15 points.

The afternoon decline was sudden and steep. At 1:30 P.M., the blue-chip average was down less than 3 points. But, after selling pressure accelerated, it finished at 986.22 with a decline of 15.43 points.

Leading blue chips and glamour issues were peppered with losses. Declines of more than 2 points appeared in du-Pont, Union Carbide, National Semiconductor, Digital Equipment and Marathon Oil—all of these issues susceptible to profit taking after recent runups in price.

Wall Street observers, scrambling to assign reasons for the swift pullback in stock prices, were anything but unanimous in their analysis.

Some said the drop reflected renewed fears over New York City's financial plight. The city's shaky fiscal situation was an important factor in market weakness last autumn before the Federal Government agreed to lend money to the city.

Some business leaders said yesterday in Washington, according to a report carried on the Dow Jones news service, that despite the Federal loan, the city still faced economic problems and eventually could be forced to default in the absence of further assistance. However, the report, which originated with United Press International, was said later to be erroneous in placing such a pessimistic light on the city's future.

Market Drop Forecast

Other observers, seeking to explain the decline, spoke of rumors—some of them circulating on the trading floor of the New York Stock Exhange itself—that a prominent market analyst was in the process of forecasting a short-term drop in stock prices.

The analyst was identified as Edson Gould, whose reports are published by Anametrics Inc., an investment advisory service. But efforts to reach Mr. Gould were unavailing and an aide at Anametrics would say only that a report was in the process of being printed yesterday.

Meanwhile, there was a school of thought that the market dropped because it repeatedly had run into a wall of resistance whenever the Dow climbed above 1,000—a level that most analysts concede holds mainly psychological impact.

But what was clear was that losses outnumbered gainers by nearly a 4-to-1 ratio.

BOND PRICES RISE; BILL RATE 4.834%

Corporate Issue Gains Cut—G.M.A.C. Notes Sold Out at 8.18%—Con Ed Upgraded

By JOHN H. ALLAN

Bond prices rose and interest rates declined yesterday as the credit markets extended the advance that began a week ago. In the afternoon, however, the upward move in the corporate bond market faltered and many issues gave up part of their gains. The week-long rise in fixed-income security prices stemmed chiefly from the current belief that the Federal Reserve is not about to tighten monetary policy and also from the fact that the schedule of new bond issues for sale is light.

Credit Markets

The Federal Reserve yesterday drained reserves temporarily from the banking system for the third day in a row, but the move was expected and it did not appear to upset the market.

"Now that money aggregates have grown more slowly than expected, there is considerably more room for money growth before the Fed funds rate is notched higher," Joseph Bench of the First Pennsylvania Bank commented, voicing the current, more widespread conclusion that the Reserve is not on

I.R.S. to Require Companies To Answer 11 Bribe Questions

S.E.C. Aide Vague on Payment Policy

By ROBERT J. COLE

The Securities and Exchange Commission's chief enforcement official left corporations uncertain yesterday exactly how much bribery the Government agency might condone without insisting on public disclosure.

Stanley Sport enforcement director for the S.E.C., commenting before lawyers on guidelines the agency has promised to issue by May 1, elicited subdued groans when he said that if he were an attorney in practice, he would not give advice on "an illegal act."

Roderick M. Hills, the S.E.C. chairman, had said a day earlier that the guidelines would come in the form of a report to the Senate Banking Committee and other "comments."

But Mr. Sporkin, speaking before the New York County Lawyers Association, at its 14 Vesey Street headquarters, said he questioned "how seemly it would appear for a Government agency to come out with guidelines that would in effect condone the kinds of activities that we have been uncovering."

Under an S.E.C. voluntary program, dozens of major corporations have come forward to disclose to stockholders millions of dollars in payoffs overseas.

Comparison Given

He likened the clamor for guidelines to a situation in which the Food and Drug Administration might be asked to provide standards for the amount of lethal lead content that a toy manufacturer can put in children's toys."

Later, in response to questions, he said the S.E.C. guidelines might be in the form of "sharing with the community" the kind of payoffs brought to S.E.C. attention "and what we did about them."

Examining the kinds of questions lawyers wanted resolved, he asked:

"Are we talking about guidelines that will in effect permit corporations to continue these illicit activities? Are we asking for the Government to indicate how much of a bribe it will consider to be appropriate? Are we attempting to draft guidelines in order to permit lawyers to advise clients as to the methods of making bribes? Are we asking for guidelines which in effect say you cannot any longer pay bribes? If we are asking for the latter, then I

Refusal to Reply to Bring Summons

WASHINGTON, April 7 (AP) —The Internal Revenue Service announced today that it was intensifying its investigation of major corporations by requiring them to answer 11 specific questions about possible bribes, kickbacks and other illegal payments.

The questions will be asked of the 1,200 major corporations routinely audited by the I.R.S., Donald C. Alexander, commissioner, said. These are corporations with gross assets exceeding $250 million each.

"If they lie, they'll have problems," and I.R.S. spokesman said. "If they don't answer, they'll have problems."

One of the questions asks whether the corporation, or anyone acting on its behalf, has made any kind of payment in any form that benefits any government official in this country or abroad to obtain special treatment or concessions of any kind.

"Were corporate funds donated, loaned or made available, directly or indirectly, to or for the use or benefit of, or for the purpose of opposing, any government or subdivision thereof, political party, candidate or committee, either domestic or foreign?" another question asks.

Corporations will also be asked whether they maintained a bank account, at home or abroad, that was not reflected on corporate books, records and financial statements.

A number of corporations have acknowledged in recent months that they paid millions of dollars in bribes, kickbacks and other illegal payments, often from secret bank accounts and slush funds.

Mr. Alexander said the questions were to be asked "of present and former corporate officials or employees who have had sufficient authority, control or knowledge of corporate activities so as to be aware of any possible misuse of funds."

If an individual refuses to answer, an I.R.S. summons, enforceable in court, will be issued.

Tax Consideration Cited

An I.R.S. spokesman said the purpose of the questions was to help make sure that taxes were properly paid and that illegal payments, for example, were not claimed as a business-expense deduction on a corporate tax return.

"We're not looking for anything other than what has tax implications," he said.

The I.R.S. previously disclosed that as many as 35 major corporations were being investigated for possible tax fraud as a result of the rash of corporate bribes and payoffs.

Responses are to be in writing and signed by the individual being questioned, either in affidavit form or "as a written declaration made under the penalties of perjury," the I.R.S. said.

A text of the 11 I.R.S. questions to major corporations appears on Page 60.

Niehaus, the local manager of Owens-Illinois operations in Venezuela on Feb. 27 demanded that certain documents be published in the foreign and domestic press before the American executive could be released.

Although the Government had told Owens-Illinois representatives that it did not want any guerrilla statement published, the company was caught by surprise when the expropriation was announced last night.

Owens-Illinois, which has operated in Venezuela since 1958, employs about 1,400 persons, only a handful of them foreigners. Although the company would not release any information on its present assets, reliable sources indicated that Owens had invested well over $25 million here. Venezuela said it would pay "just compensation."

American and other foreign businessmen, who did not want to be identified, said today that they believed the Perez Administration was excessively severe with Owens-Illinois, and that its action amounted to "a terrible overreaction."

decamaras, or from major opposition political parties.

Foreign businessmen operating in Venezuela have become accustomed to increasing degrees of Government control over recent years, and have seen the Perez Administration nationalize the country's two most important export industries—petroleum and iron ore. Over a score of foreign oil companies came under Government control Jan. 1 and received approximately $1 billion indemnity. But the action taken

Store Sales Rise Eased to 2% in March

By ISADORE BARMASH

Consumr buying among seven of New York's largest department stores faltered in March, reflecting the later date of Easter this year and the city's troubled economy.

The city's stores had an average of 2 percent advance in sales over March 1975, according to a monthly survey. But the monthly gain was the lowest since June of last year and probably reflected an actual decline in business.

Sales rises of less than 5 percent are considered in the retail industry to represent a reduced rate of individual sales transactions since prices are generally up about 5 percent in department store merchandise.

The tiny March gain reverses the improved sales trend in New York that began last year, although the pace of consumer buying in the city has been sharply under the national trend for several years.

However, with Easter coming 16 shopping days later than last year, retailers said that they believed that April sales would push up the two-month total and provide a more accurate comparison with last year.

Sears, Roebuck and Company, the country's largest retailer, expects to report today that its sales for five weeks ended April 3 showed about the same 13 percent increase over the year before as January's sales had over January, 1975, Arthur M. Wood, chairman, told security analysts in New York. In February, Sears had a 10.3 percent sales gain over Feb. 1975.

Since the Easter shopping season is traditionally a period for apparel buying, there is a strong belief among retailers that more spring clothes will be bought in a longer than shorter season. Consumers, in other words, tend to buy not merely to seasonal but to weather needs so that as the temperature warms in the next 10 days apparel sales are expected to respond favorably.

In the metropolitan area, sales in March rose only 3.3 percent on the average, the survey found, a level which was the smallest monthly gain since last July.

Yet, despite the lower average results in the city, several stores had strong gains in the month, which generally represented promotional efforts to offset the later Easter season. Among strong departments were women's sportswear, junior apparel and coats. In some stores sales in the city in the first few days of April are reported to be up over last year.

Plant Closing Plan Brings Strife in France

By CLYE H. FARNSWORTH
Special to The New York Times

LE PEAGE DE ROUSSILLON, France — "The two sides just do not talk the same language," sighs Roger Flacher, the dispirited mayor of this upper Rhone Valley industrial town where a synthetic fibers plant is to be shut down after years of strife between workers and management.

The Confédération Générale du Travail, the Communist-dominated union organization representing 75 percent of the plant's workers, is leading a campaign of corporate harassment and local and national demonstrations to try to force the company to rescind its decision. The C.G.T. is France's biggest labor group.

The company is Rhone-Poulenc, eighth biggest chemical enterprise in the world and one of France's leading multinationals. It says that it lost nearly $200 million in the world economic slump last year, and that if it is to survive this year it has to prune deficit operations, such as the acetate fiber installation here, which is losing $100,000 a month.

"That's what they claim—we don't believe their figures," says Roger de Souza, the local C.G.T. leader whose father was among Iberian immigrants the company imported between the two World Wars as a source of cheap labor.

Rhone-Poulenc has been installed for more than 60 years in this pleasant, wind-swept valley, where fields of apricot and pear trees, barley and sugar beets encircle its smoke-billowing chemical cracking plants.

As practically the sole industrial employer, its decisions have a heavy impact on the 20,000 people who live in Le Péage de Roussillon and three neighboring towns that sprang up as Rhône-Poulenc grew over the decades. Now the company is contracting, and the area is in crisis.

The crisis extends well beyond this valley. It involves elements of the growing national conflict between an alienated worker class, which turns to the well-organized and disciplined Communist-led unions to press demands for better pay and working conditions, and corporate

April Potatoes Off; Active Platinum Up

By H. J. MAIDENBERG

The April futures contract for Maine potatoes expired yesterday at $7 a hundred pounds, the price in the cash market, on the New York Mercantile Exchange. The final quotation represented a decline of $1.82 on the day.

During the life of the contract prices had ranged from a low of $5.40 shortly after posting last spring to a high of $15.92 in recent weeks. The May delivery, the last of the 1975 crop, closed up 1 cent at $11.49. Each cent represents $50 a contract.

A few feet from the potato trading pit, platinum futures rose by $1 to $1.90 an ounce in unusually active trading. Brokers reported that tired gold traders had moved into the platinum market.

Yesterday, for example, the of $1 at $159.50 on the day.

Opportunity Lost in Xerox Options

By ROBERT METZ

Like most men in the investment world, Richard Bock, a stockbroker at Advest & Company, is always looking for speculative opportunities. On Friday he thought he had found an excellent one. He was fascinated when he returned from lunch last Friday to discover Xerox April 60 options trading at ⅛.

The options, which run out April 15, were clearly a long shot, but as Mr. Bock explained, "I saw that once-in-a-lifetime chance to get rich."

He reasoned that Xerox, then trading at 52, was volatile enough to jump a number of points in either direction by the April 15 deadline for the options.

If he were to buy April 60 Xerox options at a cost of ⅛ (12½ cents a share) he would have the right to buy Xerox shares at the striking price of 60 until April 15. If the stock did not reach 60, he would lose his money. But if the stock reached 62, he would make $200 per option.

He decided to buy 100 options for $1,250 and, maybe, 200 options for $2,500. At 62—assuming the long shot worked out, that is—his gain would be $20,000 on 100 options and $40,000 on 200 options, less costs.

What if the market went the other way? A loss of $1,250 to $2,500 plus commissions would be acceptable, Mr. Bock said, adding that "I once lost $10,000 in a single day on 1,000 shares of Ponderosa, and I have lost $1,000 in a day many times."

So Mr. Bock placed an order for 100 contracts that went to the Chicago Board Options Exchange. Sorry, he was told, under the rules of the C.B.O.E. individual customers cannot buy options at prices more than $5 away from the striking price when the options themselves are selling for less than ½.

There were two exceptions to the rule, but they did not help Mr. Bock. If an investor is short the options, he can be covered despite the price limitations. The second exception involves spread, and Mr. Bock was not interested in a spread.

When he asked why he could not do the trade, he was told that the Chicago Board did not want to encourage speculation." A spokesman for the C.B.O.E. said the rule had been imposed to discourage speculation in such instances since the Securities and Exchange Commission had expressed concern during the formative period of the exchange that members of the public would trade in out-of-the money options to their detriment. It was not an S.E.C.-suggested rule, he said, but rather the exchanges response to the problem.

Mr. Bock believes the rule works against individual traders. He commented:

"What irritated me was that if Xerox was at $58—$2 away from the striking price—the April 60s would be selling at, maybe, $2, and the stock would have to go to about $62 for the customer to profit. Nobody uses the argument that an option is "too speculative at those prices."

"The weird thing is that once the option has appreciated 400 percent—to ½ from ⅛—the welcome mat is out. Obviously, the floor traders are going to make money on the long shots.

"They buy without commissions and can put, say, $5,000 a shot in one or two promising speculations and make whatever fortune there is to be made when an option is in its last couple of weeks of life. The public, meanwhile, is asked to buy when the risk has increased several times."

Meanwhile, as Mr. Bock had anticipated, Xerox shares have risen in the strong market—having reached 56½ so far. The options have reached ½ and trading has been fairly active.

On Monday, when the public was still excluded, 485 options changed hands. Mr. Bock is still convinced that Xerox can make the grade, but is obviously unhappy that he was not allowed to go along for the ride.

A Clarification

In an article in this space on Tuesday concerning the tax consequences of option trading, an example was used in which there was an indicated $10,000 long-trm capital gain and a $7,000 short-term capital loss. It was stated that $1,000 of the short-term loss was deductible and that the balance could be carried over to subsequent year. This would have been the case had the capital gains been registered in one year and the capital loss in a subsequent year. Where both occur in the same year, as indicated, capital losses must be offset against capital gains. The losses in the example would have been fully offset.

Despite the uncertain European currency markets, gold traders have been kept off balance by the threat of huge sales by central banks.

On the Chicago Board of Trade, the largest commodity exchange, selling pressure again was evident as all grans and soybeans fell a few cents. At the close, wheat was down 3 to 3½ cents a bushel; corn was steady to off 1¼ cents and soybeans declined 1¼ to 3¼ cents.

Traders attributed the decline yesterday to the lack of important export business, although overseas sales have increased somewhat. By important business, the traders mean exports to the Soviet Union.

With the major grains and soybeans now selling at or below year-ago levels, livestock feeders are again taking cattle off the range and placing them in intensive feeding confinement. There are more steers in feedlots today than at any time in the last two years, although overall numbers are down because breeders were discouraged by prices last year.

Most live beef cattle futures on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange rose the daily permissible limit of 1.5 cents a pound. Similar gains were posted for feeder cattle and hog futures.

GEORGIA-PACIFIC SETS PROFIT MARK

1st Quarter Earnings Up by 67.5%—Dividend Raised to 30c From 20c

By CLARE M. RECKERT

The Georgia-Pacific Corporation, the leading forest rroducts company, reported yesterday a record 67.5 percent rise in first-quarter profits. The company increased the quarterly dividend to 30 cents from 20 cents and proposed a 3-for-2 stock split.

A faster-than-expected recovery from the 1975 slump resulted in major gains in sales of plywood, lumber and hardboard coupled with higher prices, R. E. Flowerree, the company president, said.

First-quarter net income of $52.1 million, or 81 cents a share, rose from $31.1 million, or 50 cents a share, a year ago. Sales, also at a high, were $675-million, up 40.6 percent from $480 million. Results for last year have been restated to reflect pooling of interests with the Exchange Oil & Gas Corporation and adoption of units-of-production method of depreciation at certain building products and chemical plants.

Chemicals used directly and indirectly in forest products manufacture benefited by the upturn and "some other major chemical markets are also beginning to show signs of recovery," the chief executive commented.

City Stores

The City Stores Company, which operates Franklin Simon and W & J Sloane stores in its 150-unit chain of department, specialty and home furnishings stores, reported yesterday a net income of $3.5 million, or $1.06 a share, for the 13 weeks to Jan. 31. This was in contrast to the $93,000, or 2 cents a share, earned in the year earlier period, which included a $440,000 tax credit, or a $347,000 operating loss before this credit. Sales were up 6.9 percent to $120.5 million from $112.7 million, bringing the volume for the 52 weeks to Jan. 31 to $380.1 million, against $374.1 million in fiscal 1974, a gain of 1.6 percent.

The company has operated in the red every quarter except the final one of each year for the last several years and has shown a profit only in 1972 and 1971 since it began losing money in 1970. The loss for fiscal 1975 ended Jan. 31 was $4 million after a tax credit of that amount, while in fiscal 1974 the net loss was $5.6 million after a tax credit of $5.7 million.

Personal Finance: Loans on Stocks

By LEONARD SLOANE

With the sharp increase in stock prices in the last few months, many persons have been able to obtain bank loans using their securities as collateral.

Such loans offer the advantage of a relatively quick and inexpensive way to borrow. Loans collateralized by readily marketable securities are widely offered by banks and enable borrowers to get funds for a variety of purposes.

Most banks will make securities-collateral loans only to their regular customers. "We have to know our customer to know whether we have a valid security," said William Lonsdale, a senior vice president of the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company.

These loans are generally handled by the banks' commercial loan departments, with the customer signing a demand note for, say, 180 or 360 days. If the interest is paid on schedule and the bank is satisfied with the conditions of the loan, it will normally renew the loan on request.

Securities-collateral loans are usually offered in amounts beginning at $5,000. Loans for smaller amounts are subject to a maximum interest rate of 8½ percent under the New York State usury laws and are therefore less favorable to bankers.

The usual procedure in applying for such a loan is that a borrower brings his securities to the bank and signs a statement of purpose indicating the use to which the funds will be put. This statement is important because, if the loan is to be used to buy more securities, the Federal Reserve Board has established margin requirements for such loans.

Margin requirements are the difference between the market value of the collateral at the time the credit is extended and the maximum loan value. Since January 1974, margin requirements have been set at 50 percent.

Loans secured by securities and used for other purposes have no such specific requirements. But the amount that banks will offer depends on the policies of the particular institution.

For example, Citibank will lend up to 70 percent of the value of securities listed on the New York Stock Exchange and 60 percent on the value of those listed on the American Stock Exchange. The Chase Manhattan Bank not only lends on the basis of the securities' value but also takes into account the business that the customer does with the bank.

"We have certain guidelines, but no two loans are exactly alike," said Daniel McGlynn, a second vice president of Chase. "There are many individual considerations."

The cost of these loans is based on the prime rate—the rate charged to a bank's largest and most creditworthy corporate customers —currently at 6¾ percent. Some banks charge as little as 2 percentage points above the prime, while others set their price at up to 5 points above the prime. Here, too, the bank's relationship with the customer enters into the picture.

"A large loan has a lower cost to us and we can charge a lower differential over the prime," one banker said. "We also take into consideration our other dealings with the customer and come up with the total value of the customer to the bank."

Banks, of course, monitor the securities accepted as collateral periodically to insure that their value meets the guidelines of the loan. If, after reviewing the collateral, the bank finds that the value is too low, it will probably call for additional margin.

Some banks will complete the entire securities-collateral loan transaction within an hour, as long as they are satisfied that the securities are authentic. One borrower reported that he had obtained a loan at a suburban branch of a New York City bank in 15 minutes, with the money immediately credited to his account.

Since banks do not as a rule advertise or promote their securities-collaters. loans, many potential borrowers may be unaware of their existence. They are widely available, however, and might profitably be considered by those who might otherwise be forced to borrow at higher interest rates.

NUCLEAR POWER UNIT IS TESTED BY CON ED

BUCHANAN, N.Y., April 7 (UPI) — The State Power Authority today announced that Consolidated Edison's Indian Point 3 nuclear power plant had begun operational testing with the first controlled nuclear reaction initiated at 6:37 P.M. Monday. The testing was authorized by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

The Indian Point 3 unit, although owned by the S.P.A., is being operated on an interim basis by Con Edison. The authority said it expected to apply later this year for a license to assume full operating responsibility.

The plant is expected to begin commercial operations this summer and will have an initial rating of 873,000 kilowatts. The unit was purchased by the S.P.A. from Con Edison last December in accordance with 1974 legislation authorizing acquisition of two partially completed Con Ed plants. The other, the Astoria 6 oil-fired unit in Queens, was purchased late in 1974 and is scheduled to begin operation late this year.

Inflation Seen in Drivers' Pact

George L. Perry, an economist with the Brookings Institution, yesterday called the wage contract won by the teamsters' union last weekend "a bad settlement" and criticized President Ford for not denouncing the contract as inflationary.

Mr. Perry spoke at the Harmony Club here, at a luncheon, sponsored by Brimberg & Company, a brokerage firm. He said the teamsters' had won a 10 percent increase in wages and fringe benefits for each of the next three years. "If other wage settlements start to come in very big—like the teamsters' —I'd worry about inflation and about the future of the recovery," he said.

President Ford was reported last weekend to be "delighted" with the settlement.

Gerald L. Parsky, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, said yesterday that the answer to recent disclosures of bribery abroad by multinational corporations "is an international code of business ethics."

He said at a news conference in Charlottesville, Va., that the American business community must immediately *begin the "chore of self-*regulation" to avoid increased Government intervention in business.

"If it takes the reduction of corporate earnings from 10 to 15 percent, then the private sector has to be willing to do it," he said. "If they are not willing to do it, the Government is determined to step in."

Mr. Parsky recommended a business code, established by treaty, that would be loosely enforced by individual governments.

The Treasury official, who oversees foreign business affairs for his department, said he had not yet decided whether bribery by the multinationals should carry criminal penalties.

Larry R. Shotwell, a credit specialist, said yesterday that the financial position of American households, hard hit by the recession, had improved enough to support the continued rise in consumer spending vital to the economic recovery.

Mr. Shotwell, president of the Commercial Credit Economic Service, said the debt burden of American households had been "sharply reduced over the last three years" while their financial assets and net financial investment had shown marked improvement.

He made his remarks before the Conference Board's Consumer Outlook Conference in Chicago.

Stanley J. Goodman, chief executive officer of the May Department Stores Company, will give a violin concert Sunday in St. Louis. He will be accompanied by Barbara Liberman, a St. Louis Symphony pianist, in music of the Jeffersonian era.

Mr. Goodman, who is 66, said he had been trying for some time to put together a recital "like ones Jefferson played frequently in his home or in the Governor's mansion in Williamsburg."

Mr. Goodman, who has appeared twice as a soloist with the St. Louis Symphony, gave recitals in his youth and worked his way through McGill University by playing dinner music in hotels.

He has been with May Department Stores since 1948 and has been chief executive officer since 1969.

Kurt Barnard, president of the Mass Retailing Institute, is resigning, effective June 15. The national trade association for discount retailers, which Mr. Barnard joined in 1967 as executive vice president, has about 240 member companies, including manufacturers.

Mr. Barnard declined to comment yesterday on reports from trade sources that the organization had recently lost members following cuts in the operating budget and services.

SIMPLICITY ACTS ON STOCK OPTIONS

Officers Will Have to Pay Higher Price for Shares

By ROBERT E. BEDINGFIELD

The Simplicity Pattern Company Inc., subject to the approval of the Federal District Court for the Southern District, has agreed to raise the option price its chairman, James J. Shapiro, and four other officers of the company will pay if and when they exercise options they now hold to purchase the company's shares.

The agreement results from a derivative action against the company and its officers brought last July by Saul Goldsholl, a Simplicity stockholder.

Under the agreement, if the court finds the terms fair, reasonable and adequate and dismisses the action "on the merits and with prejudice," Mr. Shapiro will pay $9.355 a share for 153,750 shares of the company's stock, rather than the $7.561 a share, provided for on Dec. 13, 1974, under terms of the company's option awards system. Four other officers of the company will pay $8.560 a share, rather than the $7.561 a share price, set Dec. 13, 1974, also the date Simplicity made option awards to them, covering an additional 74,312 shares.

Upon exercise of the options, Simplicity will receive approximately $350,000 "over and above" what it would have received under the original terms of the options covering a total of 228,062 shares.

Violation Charged

Mr. Goldsholl, in his action, asserted that Simplicity and its officers violated the Securities Acts on Dec. 13, when the company awarded the options. Mr. Goldsholl complained that the awards were a modification of previously granted options. In his complaint, he cited how Mr. Shapiro on Dec. 5, 1974, had surrendered to *the company options for 150,-*000 shares at a price of $29.4583 a share.

In agreeing to the settlement, the company and Mr. Shapiro and the other defendants, specifically disclaimed all liability and stated they "are making this settlement solely to avoid the expense, inconvenience and distraction of continued litigation."

The defendants, besides Mr. Shapiro, include Harold Cooper, president of Simplicity; Lilyan H. Affinito, vice president; George T. Lund, executive vice president, and Myron W. Kenzer, vice president.

Daily Output of Oil In April May Reach 8.15 Million Barrels

The American Petroleum Institute yesterday estimated that domestic oil production would rise to 8.15 million barrels a day in April from the March level of 8.05 million barrels a day.

The advance runs counter to the general downward trend in the United States, which had been in evidence since domestic production peaked in 1970 at around 9.6 million barrels a day. In the four weeks ended April 4, 1975, the nation's wells produced 8.38 million barrels a day.

Most analysts do not see the advance predicted for April as a turnabout in slumping domestic production situation but rather as a temporary respite.

Gasoline stocks fell to 237.96 million barrels in the week ended April 2 from 240.36 million in the March 26 week. Americans increased their driving with the advent of better weather. A year ago supplies of gasoline stood at 242.38 million barrels.

Production Edges Up

Gasoline production moved ahead slightly to 6.55 million barrels a day from 6.52 million barrels a day in the earlier week and 6.1 million barrels a day in the week a year ago.

Distillate production turned down to 2.62 million barrels a day from 2.69 million barrels a day a week prior as the heating season is coming to a close. A year ago distillate output was 2.48 million barrels a day.

Crude imports fell sharply to 4.56 million barrels a day from 5.52 million barrels a day in the week-earlier period. A year ago the United States imported 3.44 million barrels a day.

Petroleum figures in millions of barrels follow:

	April 2	Mar. 26	April 4, 1975
Gasoline production daily	6.55	6.52	6.1
Distillate production daily	2.62	2.7	2.48

fell to 20.19 million shares from 24.17 million shares.

Nationwide trading of all issues listed on the exchange slipped to 23.52 million shares from 28.27 million shares.

One stockbroker, reflecting on the market's sudden downturn, made this comment: "The institutional investors have replaced the odd-lotters. When one guy pulls the trigger, they all shoot."

The skittish tone of the market was indicated by the action of General Electric. This blue chip, which reported an 82 percent gain in quarterly earnings after the close of trading on Tuesday, managed to slip ⅛ to 52.

Cyprus Mines fell 1⅝ to 29¾ after the company said it expects to show substantially lower profits for the 1976 first quarter.

Monogram Industries, which has a private antitrust case now pending, dropped 1⅛ to 10⅞. The company stated that it does not expect to sustain any material financial loss even if it loses the case.

Georgia Pacific, moving against the downtrend, rose ⅞ to 54⅜. The company raised its cash dividend and also said directors will recommend a 3-for-2 stock split.

Great Western United, the nation's largest producer of beet sugar, was a bright spot, as it rose 3¼ to 31¼ after gaining 1⅞ on Tuesday. Sugar issues have been strong market performers recently.

Ford Opposes Breakup Of Big Oil Companies

WASHINGTON, April 7 (UPI) — The White House said today that President Ford opposed legislation that would force big oil companies to become smaller.

A bill to force companies with a major interest in one aspect of the oil industry, such as refining, to get rid of any major interest in another aspect, such as transportation, has been reported out of a Senate Judiciary subcommittee.

The Presidential press secretary, Ron Nessen, said: "The President has never seen any evidence that indicates to him that a breakup of a major segment of the oil industry would result in either increased production or lower prices.

"The President does not think the advocates of this bill have the case to support their claims and feels there is at least a chance that the bill would really retard domestic production rather than increase it and therefore increase the vulnerability of the United States [to foreign oil sources]."

OWENS TAKEOVER CREATES DISMAY

by the Government last night startled even the most experienced Government observers.

The guerrilla documents published abroad that have caused the Government so much concern contain charges that Owens-Illinois and other multinational companies operating here "meddled in the international affairs" of Venezuela and "plundered" the Venezuelan people.

During the last week newspapers have been subject to unusual pressures from the Perez Administration directed at quashing the publication of propaganda from the guerrillas, which is usually sent to newspapers and other media in the form of "news releases."

The news releases sent out by the guerillas, a hitherto unknown group called the Revolutionary Command, make no specific charges nor do they present evidence of malfeasance on the part of Owens-Illinois or the Venezuelan Government. The guerrillas have, however, named several prominent Venezuelans as being involved in illicit business activities with Owens and other companies. So far, only parts of the guerrilla communiqués have been released.

The Government's position is that it alone should deal with the kidnappers and cannot tolerate interference in its domestic policy.

U. S. Voices Concern

WASHINGTON, April 7 (AP) — The State Department expressed concern today about Venezuela's decision to expropriate the holdings of Owens-Illinois Glass.

The State Department spokesman, Robert Funseth, defended Venezuela's right to nationalize foreign holdings but said, "We are concerned about the use of expropriation as a criminal sanction." question why such a guideline is necessary."

"They want to know how much they can get away with and I'm not going to tell them," he said in an interview. Like all S.E.C. officials, Mr. Sporkin's comments are his own and do not represent official policy. Nevertheless, as one of the most highly regarded regulatory officials in Washington, Mr. Sporkin's views—even personal ones—are eagerly sought.

He severely chastized the legal profession for hinderin- rather than helping the S.E.C. in dealing with the increasingly alarming "problem" of illegal payments. He praised John J. *McCloy, the New York law*yer, for his report on political slush funds of the Gulf Oil Corporation but said he was *"deeply troubled" that few oth*er lawyers had shown interest in resolving the problem.

The S.E.C. official said he also had "specific evidence of misconduct" by some lawyers. He said, however, the instances were "very few." adding that the agency had found information that lawyers had "played a part in facilitating the payment of bribes" while others, he was "convinced" had knowledge of or had condoned such activities.

CANADAIR WILL MAKE NEW LEARSTAR 600

Canadair Ltd., which is owned by the Canadian Government, announced yesterday that it had acquired production rights to a new small jet plane designed by William P. Lear.

Canadair, a former division of the General Dynamics Corporation that was sold in January, plans to begin delivery of the Learstar 600 in early 1979 with sales reaching 10 planes a month.

The aircraft will have two engines and will accommodate up to 30 passengers on short-range commuter routes or 14 executives on nonstop trips up to 4,500 miles. The plane could also be used exclusively for up to 7,500 pounds of cargo.

The company said that about half of the components of the aircraft would be built in the United States, including the engines, which would be made by the Avco Corporation's Lycoming division in Stratford, Conn.

French Plant's Closing Brings Strife

managers who contend they are blocked at every juncture by a highly politicized labor group, interested, they maintain, less in worker advancement than national power.

"In your country, or in Germany," a local banker observed, "one splits the difference and compromises. "Here there is an eternal battle of ideology.

"For 150 years the issue was the monarchy," he asserted. "Well before that it was the English presence in France. Now the issue is social. In our ideological confrontations there is never foom for comromise."

"There can be no compromise in the class struggle against the capitalist monopolists," says a local C.G.T. delegate André Vallat.

The acetate fiber plant employs 850 workers. Rhone-Poulenc's locsl manager, Yvon de la Casinière, and the textile division assistant general manage, Jean-Claude la Chaussee, told a union forum two weeks ago that the company would transfer nearly a third of the workers to its nearby chemical works. But, they added, the remaining 515 will lose their jobs. Most of them are in their late 40's or early 50's.

So angry was the reaction that the two executives were prevented from leaving the plant for six hours. One union delegate said the two were released only after a decision taken at C.G.T. headquarters in Paris, apparently reflecting a strategy of gradual rather than sudden escalation of the conflict.

The C.G.T. and its ally, a radical leftist-led union organization known by the initials C.F.D.T. — Confédération Française Démocratique du Travail—say they intend to fight any job elimination with strikes at all Rhône-Poulenc plants in France.

The company employs 90,000 in the country. The plant shutdown here, which is to become effective before the end of the year, is part of a broader restructuring effort by the giant enterprise that the unions say will eliminate 5,000 jobs. Pierre Sommet, a company spokesman, confirms that such a program is under way but declines to corroborate the union figures. "We will try to transfer as many workers as possible to other plants," he says.

In a program of a united left movement against the government of President Valéry Giscard D'Estaing Rhône-Poulenc is high on the list of companies that would be nationalized. Company officials say this would mean that in effect the rest of the country would be called on to subsidize full employment at Rhône-Poulenc.

By all accounts, the workers have made some solid gains. Their take-home pay, according to C.G.T. delegates, averages between 2,500 and 3,000 francs a month ($550 to $650), which is at least 30 percent above the national mean. The actual cost to the company is an additional 70 percent because of social security and other charges.

The workers take early retirement at the age of 55, have four weeks of vacation in the summer, one in the winter. Most of the workers have automobiles and television sets. Some own fields where the pears and apricots grow.

C.G.T. delegates say the benefits were extracted by years of struggle and that the workers overwhelmingly support the union for what it has been able to achieve.

Although it is not the official position, some middle-management officers here report that almost continual labor action had increased costs to the point where operations become unprofitable.

"Thousands of man-hours have been lost by strikes, not just about local conditions but against the regime in Chile, Americans in Vietnam, anything on the international catalogue of protest issues of the Communist Party," one officer said.

Reprisal Denied

Officially, the company refuses to say that reprisal is the motive for closing the plant. It contends simply that international economic and monetary conditions have made acetate fiber an unprofitable product to manufacture in France. "It is purely an economic decision," Rhone-Poulenc's spokesman emphasizes.

Mr. de Souza of the C.G.T. says it is impossible for the company to justify closing the plant when it is the only producer of the fiber in France and when needs for the material, used in suits, dresses, curtains, neckties and even umbrellas, will now have to be completely satisfied by imports.

Workers and managers of every plant in France are supposed to communicate with each other through what are known as committees of enterprise, bodies of union delegates that meet *periodically with the manag*ers to hear how business is going and how specific plant problems are being handled. The committees were set up under statutes going back three decades.

C.G.T. delegates say they heard nothing about the plant closedown in the enterprise committee until March 15, when it was presented as an irrevocable decision of the Paris headquarters of the company.

Business Briefs

Southern Railway Sets Outlay Peak

The Southern Railway announced yesterday a $179.2 million capital expenditures budget for 1975, a record for the carrier, and one of the largest budgets within the industry. It will cover the company's acquisition of 30 new locomotives and 2,912 new freight cars as well as the expenditure of $48.3 million for roadway structures and signals.

Common Market Offers Concessions

GENEVA, April 7 (UPI)—The European Economic Community today offered developing countries special trade concessions on 180 tropical products including coffee, cocoa, tea and tobacco. The community said its offer applied to all developing countries not already enjoying special customs union arrangements with the Common Market.

The concessions, made within the Tokyo round of trade liberalization negotiations, cover $2.3 billion a year worth of tropical exports, it said. Products include coffee, cocoa, tea, tobacco, spices, processed vegetable oils, flowers and shellfish.

The community said that for the first time in international trade negotiations it agreed to restrain specific taxes levied by its member nations on a certain number of tropical products such as coffee, tea and spices.

Dollar and Pound Move Up; Gold Drops

BRUSSELS, April 7 (UPI)—The British pound inched up today from the previous day's historic low on European money markets, with a generally favorable reaction to Britain's new budget. The dollar closed higher on all markets except Brussels. The price of gold fell 25 cents in London to $128 and dropped 75 cents in Zurich to $127.87.

In London the pound rose from yesterday's closing rate of $1.86132 to $1.86875. Sterling had hit a low yesterday at $1.8525, but it rallied with dealers' generally favorable reactions to the new budget announced yesterday afternoon. Sterling also improved in Zurich from 4.7060 to 4.7490 Swiss francs and in Frankfurt from 4.705 to 4.7450 marks.

In Brussels the dollar eased from 40.945 to 40.90 Belgian francs. But it closed higher on other European markets—up from 2.5350 to 2.5415 marks in Frankfurt, from 2.5338 to 2.5413 Swiss francs in Zurich, from 4.6635 to 4.6675 French francs in Paris, from 2.6865 to 2.6880 guilders in Amsterdam and from 857 to 865.50 lire in Milan.

House Unit Votes End to Fund Aid

WASHINGTON, April 17 (AP)—A bill to end the tax-free treatment of all but a few partnership stock swap funds was approved today by the House Ways and Means Committee. By voice vote, the Ford Administration-backed bill was cleared for full House action. Special rules, such as limits on the size of funds, would apply for the exceptions, which were in various stages of being created when the bill was proposed in February.

A swap fund is an investment program through which large numbers of investors pool stocks or debt securities in exchange for shares of the fund. Such funds let investors diversify their concentrated ownership of a few securities into a wider variety.

Fiasco at Alodex Follows Success at Holiday Inns

the large losses suffered by the company on some projects. A stockholder suit over conflicting reports on the company's financial status eventually resulted in a $4 million judgment against Alodex management. Mr. Wilson and Mr. Johnson reportedly stepped in to make good personally any part of the payment that Alodex could not meet.

"From 1971 on, it's been nothing but bad news for this company," said Fred E. Jones, president of Alodex, who has been overseeing its liquidation. Mr. Jones, a lawyer, has been with Alodex since 1964.

"The original losses, I think, were due to inadequate controls over field construction," he said. This was followed by the company's inability to sell some of its housing units and by the upward spiral in interest rates.

Mr. Jones, Mr. Johnson and Mr. Wilson take pride in the fact that, although it has taken time to work off the debts of Alodex, they have not left anybody "in the lurch," as Mr. Jones put it.

Foote's Inner Depths Explored

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

This week the third annual worldwide managers' meeting of Foote, Cone & Belding has drawn 45 such persons and their spouses to the Big Apple and the Regency Hotel.

The managers will be spending their time at seminars and discussions covering such topics as creative work, new-business techniques, diversification into other areas of communications (but not cable television), the evolution of advertising strategies and finance and administration.

In other words, a real fun time.

John E. O'Toole, president of the agency, hopes the greatest benefit from the week will be that each participant will come away having gained from the experiences of his fellows and reinforced in the principles that have made the company. They will also have been reminded of the facilities available from the corporation.

One of those facilities happens to be the creative talents of Mr. O'Toole, the one-time copywriter who devotes 60 to 65 percent of his working time to the F.C.&B. worldwide creative product.

And there's no creative director hired in any of the eight domestic or 13 overseas offices without the approval of El Presidente. He ranks the creative director second only to the general manager in his importance to the agency.

Yesterday when the F.C.&B. managerial forces gathered in solemn conclave they heard Mr. O'Toole discuss the subject of creativity and the creative director.

To prepare himself for the important moment Mr. O'Toole, with the help of questionnaires, had created a composite of the agency's domestic creative directors. He called this person Max.

Max, Mr. O'Toole said, is primarily male and 44 years old and even in this day and age claims to have a religion. Max is a college graduate, having majored in communications or journalism, and really dedicated his life to advertising during his first year in the business.

With his spouse and two children, Max lives in the suburbs, plays tennis, read two books last month and saw two movies, "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" and "The Sunshine Boys."

When asked to rank his own feelings about the future of the world, the country and the business from optimistic, to hopeful, from neutral to pessimistic, Max was hopeful to optimistic about both the world and the country but only hopeful for the business.

"I plan to probe this further," said Mr. O'Toole.

Doyle, Rapp in Talks

Doyle Dane Bernbach formally announced yesterday that it was having acquisition conversations with Rapp & Collins, a direct marketing agency.

You might be confused by this if you recall that in 1971 Rapp & Collins merged with Stone & Adler in Chicago to become Rapp, Collins, Stone & Adler.

Stanley Rapp, the president, explained that the two offices had decided, amicably, to go their separate ways since the Chicago group had accounts that would conflict with D.D.B.'s in the areas of oil, airlines and insurance.

New West Due Monday

Law suit or no, New West magazine, New York Magazine's West Coast offshoot, will be out next Monday with a phenomenal 93 pages of advertising.

The new publication is sure to exceed its 125,000 circulation rate base since it already has that number of subscribers. So all newsstand sales will be gravy.

The magazine reports that its 433,000-piece subscription solicitation mailing brought in an 8 percent response and a 1.2 million-piece mailing had a 6 percent response. Both were far higher than expected.

The California subsidiary of New York Magazine is being sued by the New West Corporation over the use of the name.

Magazine for Italians

Meanwhile, here in New York a group of people is working at 265 Madison Avenue to bring out a magazine specifically for Italian Americans. It's called I-AM and July 1 is the target date for publication.

Albert P. Schrager, described by his associates as a former supermarket chain operator, is the publisher. Marco C. Napoli, formerly with Il Progresso, the Italian-language newspaper, is editor.

Ken Gouldthorpe, the managing editor who had the same job at Penthouse, said that I-AM would be shooting for an initial circulation of 100,000 and would be asking for $1,200 for a black and white advertising page and $1,620 for four color.

Golf Digest Addition

Garey T. Symington, who had been United States advertising director of Time magazine and briefly publisher of Weekend Sports magazine, has joined Golf Digest as director of sales development.

Samsonite Champions

Arnold Palmer, the golfer, and Evonne Goolagong, the tennis player, are perfect spokesmen for Samsonite luggage, says L. Keith Niemann, the company's vice president-marketing, because both athletes and bags stand for "championship, performance and dependability."

J. Walter Thompson, Samsonite's agency, has brought the champions together for a TV commercial that will promote the Samsonite Super Sale of its Silhouette luggage that will run from May 15 through May 31.

Elsewhere in the world of sports, the athletic types at Capital Sports have been named sole and exclusive worldwide marketing agent for the 1980 Winter Olympics in Lake Placid, N.Y.

12% Rise Is Forecast In Advertising Revenues

Yes, there is a general feeling of optimism in the advertising business and yesterday an agency executive tried to pass along some of it to a group of security analysts in Atlanta. You think that's easy.

A forecast of a 12 percent increase in advertising expenditures this year was made by Carl Spielvogel, vice chairman - administration of the Interpublic Group of Companies, a public held corporation and the biggest company of its kind.

He told the Atlanta Society of Security Analysts that he was making his prediction with some caution because the "first quarter of the calendar year is seasonably below average." However, he was able to cite good revenue gains by television, newspapers and magazines. hTat's where it's at, after all.

Special to The New York Times

LITCHFIELD, Conn., April 7—A private detective who was instrumental in winning a new trial for Peter A. Reilly last month was arrested here today on a weapons charge stemming from the controversial case.

James G. Conway, a 58 year-old former New York City policeman, surrendered at the State Police Barracks here this afternoon and was released pending a hearing on charges of unlawful possession of a revolver while attending a court hearing on the case.

Later, Mr. Conway and his attorney, T. F. Gilroy Daly, called the charges part of a pattern of harassment designed to intimidate the detective. Mr. Conway discovered much of the evidence that led a Superior Court judge to order a new trial for the 21-year-old Mr. Reilly in the murder of his mother two and a half years ago.

If convicted, Mr. Conway could be sentenced to serve up to five years in prison. Even if given a suspended sentence, he would lose his private investigator's license and be unable to help with Mr. Reilly's defense in the new trial this fall.

"One does not have to be a genius to figure out what's going on," Mr. Daly, who is also Mr. Reilly's attorney, said after Mr. Conway was released in his own recognizance.

State's Attorney John F. Bianchi, who prosecuted Mr. Reilly in 1974 and defended that prosecution during six weeks of hearings here on Mr. Reilly's petition for a new trial, said in an affidavit that Mr. Conway had attempted to enter the hearings carrying the gun and that his license to carry it in Vernon, Conn., where he lives, did not extend to Litchfield.

"I certainly deny any harassment," Mr. Bianchi said today.

Mr. Conway said that he had brought the gun to court to protect himself against a witness who threatened to kill him and that he had voluntarily left the .38-caliber revolver with a deputy sheriff during the hearings. Later in the day, he said, he was informed that his license was not valid in Litchfield and the gun was seized.

Ford Rejects Easing Cable-TV Curbs

illegal umbrella against competition.

Mr. MacAvoy, a prime proponent of deregulation, said that the decision not to go forward with the cable proposal was made by the Domestic Council Review Group on Regulatory Reform.

Mr. MacAvoy acknowledged in an interview that there had been great pressure from the broadcasters aimed at stopping the Administration from making any legislative proposal. But he denied that this pressure had been decisive in the ultimate decision.

"The industry screamed bloody murder," he explained. "But those who propose change have the burden of coming up with the evidence about its probable impact. And if you don't have the substantive answers, the vultures start sweeping down on you. You have to have specific answers for every challenge."

Comments on Research

The economist contended that the available research left too many unanswered questions in such areas as the possible impact of change on existing broadcasters to justify a formal Administration recommendation to Congress.

Representative Torbert H. Macdonald, the Massachusetts Democrat who heads the House Communications Subcommittee staff that recently criticized the existing rules, said in response to an inquiry that "I can only conclude that political pressure has been brought to bear in order to maintain the status quo within the broadcast and cable industries."

Though Mr. Macdonald announced today he was retiring at the end of the present Congressional term for reasons of health, he said his subcommittee would redouble its efforts to enact new cable legislation. "The major initiative in this area has been undertaken by our subcommittee and it is our subcommittee that will follow through on it," he said.

Mr. Rose, who is with the Justice Department's Antitrust Division, also denied that the Administration decision represented a submission to industry.

Called 'Moving Target'

"I don't think it did," he replied, at the same time acknowledging that an election year never provides "the best climate for rational and dispassionate discussion of the issues."

Mr. Rose said that a major reason he had decided an Administration cable proposal this year would be "premature and unwise" was that the subject presented a "moving target."

The subject that causes the broadcasters such concern is the cable-television industry. It now consists of about 3,350 cable systems in 7,300 communities and provides improved reception for about 15 percent, or 10 million, of the total television households in the United States.

What the White House regulatory group considered and ultimately rejected were several legislative formulas to eliminate or modify the present F.C.C. regulations that sharply limit right of pay cable television to purchase rights to first run movies and sports events.

State 'Waits Out' Protest By Mental Hospital Patients

The State Department of Correctional Services is "waiting out" a demonstration by inmates at Matteawan State Hospital for mentally ill prisoners in Beacon, N.Y., according to Deputy Commissioner Lewis Douglas.

About 200 of the 300 Matteawan patients have remained in dayrooms and refused to eat in the mess hall or sleep in the dormitories since Friday night, but Mr. Douglas said yesterday they have been receiving food and necessary medicine.

The patients are asking for a change in parole procedure, enlarged staff and additional programs.

Cold front: a boundary between cold air and warmer air, under which the colder air pushes like a wedge, usually south and east.

Warm front: a boundary between warm air and a retreating wedge of colder air over which the warm air is forced as it advances, usually north and east.

Occluded front: a line along which warm air was lifted by opposing wedges of cold air, often causing precipitation.

Shaded areas indicate precipitation.

Dashlines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures.

Isobars are lines (solid black) of equal barometric pressure (in inches), forming air-flow patterns.

Winds are counterclockwise toward the center of low-pressure systems, clockwise outward from high-pressure areas. Pressure systems usually move east.

Here's what you missed... if you didn't see last Sunday's New York Times

Follow-Up on the News
Rail link to Kennedy International Airport? Plans were announced eight years ago. Believe it or not, the project is still "alive."

Fly-Fishers
What makes a man wade against the current in icy water swishing a rod with a feather attached to a long line? It may be an incurable disease. But that's because the victims don't want to be cured.

Recordings
These days, that word can also mean tape cassettes. Are they as good as records? How good are those "Greatest Hits" albums? What composers do conductors pick to impress you? The special Recordings section would have told you.

Lost Luggage
If you've ever been up in the air over what happened to your bags on a plane flight, you're not alone. It happened to 3 million people last year.

Bicentennial gardens
How to grow a red, white and blue flower garden in the shape of a star. Or a vegetable garden that would make a Minuteman proud.

And More!
And even more coming up in next Sunday's Times. It will be filled with things to catch the fancy of everyone in the family. Catch up with The Times next Sunday . . . without fail. To make sure you see the Sunday Times every Sunday call

'Truman in Potsdam,' or Interpreting History

J. O'CONNOR

se of "Truman in night's Hallmark e production on 8 o'clock. David the narrator. iewer is remind- nt history such atized tonight is individual inter- pretation. All names and events are factual and have been carefully researched. But not all historians agree on the reconstruction of history."

This limp coda is offered after nearly 90 minutes of television content has been trying to persuade the viewer that this is indeed precisely the way it happened. And once again, television enters that murky area where fact and fiction are curiously, perhaps dangerously, intertwined.

The problem is especially peculiar to television. Movies are generally accepted and approached as pure fictions. Historical films can be historical fantasies. But television is a completely different medium, one in which factual news broadcasts play a major role. The use of fact and fiction becomes infinitely more complicated.

As Mr. Schoenbrun warns, interpretation can be crucial. And when the historians themselves disagree about interpretation, television treads on sensitive ground. "Truman at Potsdam" is based on Charles L. Mee Jr.'s "Meeting at Potsdam," which provided one view of the historic 1945 conference: "At the end of the conference they did not write the peace agreement that the press anticipated; rather, they signed what amounted to a tripartite declaration of the Cold War. How they rescued discord from the threatened outbreak of peace is the story of this book."

The major powers — the United States, Britain and the Soviet Union — had met earlier that year, in February, at Yalta, where Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin seemed to have reached the borders of major agreements. By Potsdam, in July, Germany had been defeated, Roosevelt was dead and Churchill was about to be defeated in a general election. President Truman had a new weapon called the atomic bomb.

Mr. Mee's observations on this weapon are explicit: "No one likes, or wants, to confront the fact—but it is clear from the events and conversations during the Potsdam conference that the use of the atomic bomb against Hiroshima and Nagasaki was wanton murder." The television drama has Truman saying that "it is not Japan I'm trying to scare, but Russia." But other historians have argued that the prime motive in dropping the two bombs was to end the war with a tenacious enemy.

The dramatization—written by Sidney Carroll, directed by George Schaefe and produced by David Susskind—is not nearly so detailed as Mr. Mee's book. In fact, the enormous spectrum of Potsdam is reduced to a few key scenes supplemented with various "eyewitness reports." But the basic Mee approach is maintained. Who was responsible for the "failures" of Potsdam? Mr. Mee rejects the theory of a single villain. He blames everyone.

Then, there are the historical impersonations—not bad on the whole, but splattered with odd quirks. Jose Ferrer's Stalin is ominous shrewdness and, when all else fails, the actor can revert to bits and pieces of gruff Russian dialogue. As Churchill, John Houseman has a firm grip on the famous manner*isms but still sounds more* Boston Brahmin than British.

Does the point of Mr. Mee's lavishly annecdotal book hold? In a review of the book, A.J.P. Taylor, the British historian, made a more convincing point:

"No one would dispute that the Potsdam meeting was the prelude to the Cold War. This is very far from saying that any of the participants deliberately set out to provoke the Cold War or foresaw its coming. . . . As entertainment [Mr. Mee's] book is highly successful. As serious history it is as bad as a book can be."

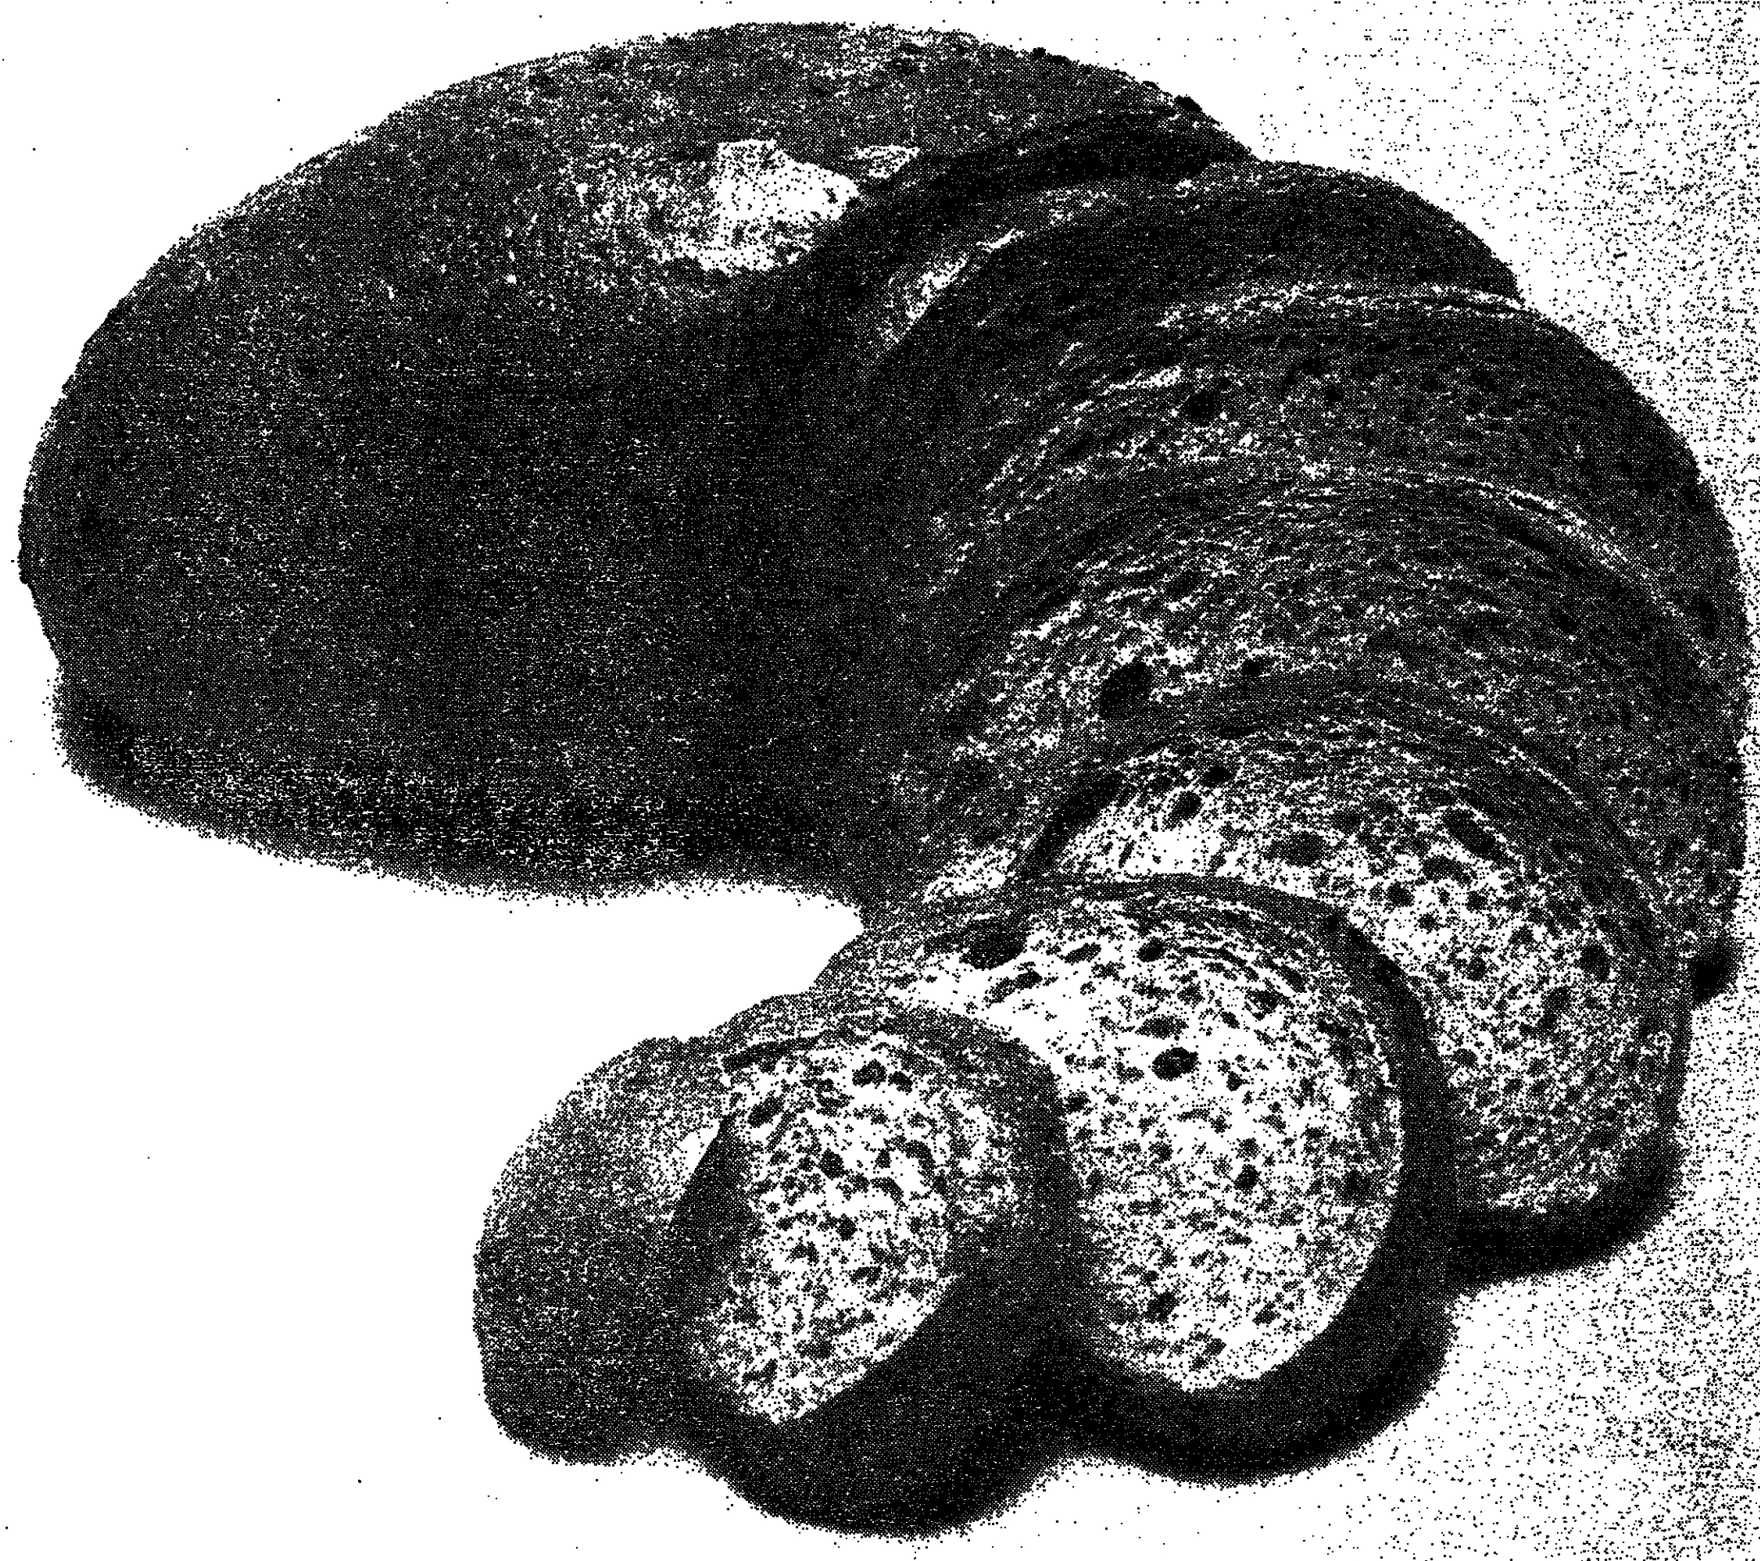
Capture a bigger share of the loaf.



When you're out to reach the man who reaches the decisions, you want to reach the top slices of management.

In a study of reading preferences among 2,042 top and middle management executives in major companies, The Journal was the overwhelming choice of managers earning $50,000+ per year:

87% . . . The Wall Street Journal
65% . . . Business Week
53% . . . Forbes
48% . . . Fortune
47% . . . Time
36% . . . Newsweek
34% . . . Sports Illustrated
27% . . . U.S. News & World Report

The preference for The Journal was equally impressive at every level of management compensation, from $20,000 per year and up.

The decided edge accorded The Journal reflects more than reading habits, of course. It's also an impressive indication of the trust and confidence management has in The Journal—factors of major importance when you're out to make your advertising work harder.

So put your advertising where you'll reach the upper crust of management, and the middle, too.

Use The Wall Street Journal.

After all, in times like these, you simply cannot afford to let your advertising loaf.
